do, 1 dū; 2 dọ, v. [DID; DO'ING; DONE; ind. pres. DO'EST or DOST (Rare or Poet.), DOES, DO'ETH or DOTH (Rare or Poet.); 2d per. sing. imp. DIDST, DID'EST†.] I. t. 1. To carry forward or bring to accomplishment, as any kind of work or business; perform; execute; effect; transact; serve, as a term in prison: a substitute for almost any verb indicating action, operation, or production; as, to do your work or your bidding; to do an errand. 2. To affect by any kind of work so as to put into a certain state or to connect with a desired result; to treat with care or attention; prepare, arrange, or modify by intentional action; visit and examine, as a building or city; as, to do one's hair; to do an omelet; to do the sights; to do a problem. 3. Hence, to render from one language into another; translate methodically.

I speak of his [Homer's] compound epithets, and of his repetitions. Many of the former cannot be done literally into English without destroying the purity of our language.
POPE Homer's Iliad pref., p. 11. [R. & S.]

4. To produce as a result by intentional action; perform an act causing (a result or effect): with both a direct and indirect object, the latter usually preceded by to or for; as, to do justice, honor, homage; to do good or evil; to do a favor or an injury for or to any one. 5. To bring to completion; finish; achieve; accomplish; as, to do a mile in three minutes: especially in the past participle; as, no sooner said than done.

If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well
It were done quickly. SHAKESPEARE Macbeth act. i, sc. 7.

6. [Colloq.] To be sufficient for; serve; as, $50 will do me for the present. 7. To advance money on; cash; as, to do a bill or note. 8. To employ, as effort, in effecting; exert; put forth; as, do your utmost to persuade him. 9. [Slang.] To swindle; cheat; defraud: usually qualified in some way, or followed by out of; as, they did me out of all the money.

The Anglo-Norman mind . . . will stickle for the dust in the balance in a matter of business, and would blush at being done by Mercury himself.
LOWELL Fireside Travels, Italy p. 215. [H. M. & CO. 1886.]

10. [Slang.] To injure seriously or kill; as, if you stir I'll do you. 11. To assume the character of; play the part of; as, to do the lady's man.

You find people ready enough to do the Samaritan, without the oil and twopence. SMITH in Lady Holland's Sydney Smith vol. i, ch. 11, p. 233. [H. 1855.]

12†. To put; place; fix. 13†. To cause or bring about: followed by an object and the infinitive, or by the infinitive alone; as, he did do hew the knight from his saddle. II. i. 1. To exert or employ oneself in any way; act; especially, to strive or work vigorously; make effort or exertion; as, let us be up and doing.

Our duty down here is to do, not to know.
OWEN MEREDITH Lucile pt. ii, can. 2, st. 1.

2. To comport, demean, or conduct oneself; as, to do rightly in the sight of all men.

I do then with my friends as I do with my books. I would have them where I can find them, but I seldom use them. EMERSON Essays, Friendship in first series, p. 173. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

3. To fare in an undertaking; as, in the drawing I did badly. 4. To contrive to get along; manage; shift; as, what shall we do for money? 5. To fare in health; be in a physical condition; as, how do you do? 6. To serve the object intended; answer the purpose; be enough; suffice; as, this is all I have: will it do?

III. auxiliary. As an auxiliary do is used (1) in interrogative or negative clauses; as, how do you do? I do not think so; (2) to express emphasis; as, I do believe you; (3) sometimes in the imperative, to add force or express earnestness; as, do answer: used with the verb be only in the imperative; as, do be patient; also used merely to intensify an imperative; as, be patient, do. (4) merely as an inflection of the principal verb: now seldom used except poetically.

And then methought it did appear A violet dropping dew.
BYRON Hebrew Melodies, I Saw Thee Weep st. 1.

IV. substitute. As do may be used to denote any kind of action, it is often used as a substitute for a verb, indicating action, to avoid the repetition of such a verb.

As a substitutionary verb, in strict use it appears only where some part of do precedes; as, "I did not say, as some do." But from its exceeding convenience, it is frequently used without reference to this rule; as, "I will not affirm, as some do" (sc. affirm). Disagreeable repetition of a preceding verb is often thus avoided.

Christ did not ask his disciples to believe without proof then; he does not now. HOPKINS Evidences of Christianity lect. xii, p. 353. [M. & S. 1876.]

3†. Knowledge; learning; discipline. [F., < L. doctrina, < doctor; see DOCTOR, 1.]

SYN.: article of belief, article of faith, belief, dogma, precept, principle, teaching, tenet. Doctrine primarily signifies that which is taught; principle, the fundamental basis on which the teaching rests. A doctrine is reasoned out, and may be defended by reasoning; a dogma rests on authority, as of direct revelation, the decision of the church, etc. A doctrine may be a formal statement of some one item of belief; a creed is a summary of doctrines or dogmas. Dogma has commonly, at the present day, an offensive signification, as of a belief arrogantly asserted. Tenet is simply that which is held, and is applied to a single item of belief: it is a neutral word, neither approving nor condemning; we speak of the doctrines of our own church; of the tenets of others. A precept rules not so belief, but so conduct. Compare synonyms for FAITH; LAW; OPINION.— ANT.: action, conduct, deed, doing, duty, fact, operation, performance, practise.

— doctrine of colors, a theory of color which pretends to explain the appearance of certain fossilized faunæ generally considered as antedating the particular rock formations in which they are found. His hypothesis is that through the temporary breakdown of geological barriers certain faunæ were enabled to penetrate into isolated basins from the surrounding territory only to succumb in a relatively short time to the hostile environment.— d. of two aspects (Philos.), an ultimate theory respecting the relation of mind and matter which assumes that the mental world and the material physical world are two aspects of a fundamental but not necessarily substantive reality.— Drago d. (Inter. Law), a principle propounded in 1907 by Luis María Drago, of the Argentine Republic, and which seeks to prohibit armed intervention or the occupation of the territory of any American nation by a European power on account of its debts.— Monroe d. (U. S. Hist.), the principle of non-intervention of European powers in American affairs, and the prohibition of their further territorial expansion on the American continent, enunciated by President Monroe in his message to Congress, Dec. 2, 1823.

SYN.: arrogant, authoritative, dictatorial, doctrinal, domineering, imperious, magisterial, opinionated, overbearing, self-opinionated, systematic. Dogmatic is technically applied in a good sense to that which is formally enunciated by adequate authority; doctrinal to that which is stated in the form of doctrine to be taught or defended. Dogmatic theology, called also "dogmatics," gives definite propositions, which it holds to be delivered by authority; systematic theology considers the same propositions in their logical connection and order as parts of a system; a doctrinal statement is less absolute in its claims than a dogmatic treatise, and may be more partial than the systematic treatise would imply. Outside of theology, dogmatic has generally an offensive sense; a dogmatic statement is one for which the author does not trouble himself to give a reason, either because of the strength of his convictions, or because of his contempt for those whom he addresses; thus dogmatic is, in common use, allied with arrogant and kindred words. — dog-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.— dog-mat'i-cal-ness, n.— dog-mat'i-cism, n.

In the United States, specif.: (1) A silver coin, weighing 412.5 grains (371.25 grains of silver and 41.25 of alloy). (2) A gold piece, weighing 25.8 grains, nine-tenths fine, no longer coined. (3) A legal-tender note, either a greenback or a silver certificate. The standard silver dollar was authorized to be coined by act of Congress dated April 2, 1792. Its weight was fixed at 416 grains, standard silver; thereof 892.4 = equivalent to 371 1/4 grains of fine silver with 44 3/4 grains alloy of pure copper. By act of Jan. 18, 1837, the weight was changed to 412 1/2 grains. EVANS Hist. of U. S. Mint p. 62. [AUTHOR, 1886.] 2. A coin of various other countries, as (1) the gold dollar of Newfoundland, equivalent to 4 shillings and 1 1/2 pence in British, or $1.014 in United States money of which a two-dollar piece is coined; (2) the thaler of Germany and Scandinavia; (3) the Spanish peso or piece of eight; (4) the Egyptian 20-piastre piece; (5) the Central American peso; and (6) the Hellas gourde. See COIN. Bot.* The large false wintergreen (Pyrola rotundifolia).—d.-mark, n. The sign $, meaning dollar or dollars when placed before a number. Of many suggestions advanced as to the origin of this character the following are the chief: (1) That it is a modification of the figure 8, as it was originally on the Spanish piece of eight; (2) that it is a representation of the pillars of Hercules, as represented on Spanish pillar dollar; (3) that it was adopted as the monogrammic form of the ecclesiastic symbol I. H. S., or of the abbreviation U. S.—d. of the saddle, a piquant name applied to the dollar during the agitation for its remonetization, effected in 1878.—globe d., a Spanish dollar of the 18th century bearing a representation of two hemispheres inscribed with the words d. [Austral.], a Spanish dollar of the value of about 5 shillings, with a center-bit or "dump" taken out, used in Tasmania about 1823. holey d.; pierced d.; ring-d.; —Lafayette d., a United States silver dollar struck in 1900 to commemorate the Marquis de Lafayette, in 1900.—Levant d., the Levantine thaler of Austria. See COIN.—Maria Theresa d., same as LEVANT DOLLAR.—Mexican d., a silver coin worth intrinsically 49.8 cents U. S., the monetary standard of Mexico. It contains 417.74 grains (27.073 grams) of silver .9027 fine. Its legal value in Mexico was fixed in 1904 at 0.75 gram of pure gold. pe'so†.—Straits Settlement d., a silver coin sanctioned by Order in Council, Feb. 11, 1907, of 312 grains, .900 fine, equivalent in U. S. money to 56.8 cents.—trade d., a silver dollar of 420 grains formerly coined by the United States mint for purposes of trade with eastern Asia. It was not a legal tender.

Domes'day" Book,] dā" or dōmz'dā". Eng. Hist. A book containing the results of the cadastral survey of England made in 1085–1086 by William the Conqueror. It consists of two volumes written on vellum, a folio of 900 pages and a quarto of 450 pages, and contains the names of the successive landowners, the annual value of estates, the number of tenants, live stock, etc. It furnishes the basis of the historical accounts of the times of the Conquest, and has to purpose to tax property. In 1783 and 1816 it was printed in facsimile, and since 1861 it has been in part photozincographed. There are also several local Domesdays, as York, Chester, Ely, Winchester, and Evesham. Of these the most important is the Domesday of St. Paul's, made in 1181 by the dean of the chapter, which contains the records of a survey of its estates.

Reduced Facsimile of Domesday Book.

Translation: The King holds in demesne Stoch [Stoke]. It was of the farm of King Edward. When it furnished defense for seventeen hides They paid no taxes. There is land for sixteen carucates (plows). In demesne there are two carucates and twenty-four villeins and four bordars with twenty carucates. There is a church there, which William holds of the King with half a hide in frankalmoigne. There are five serfs and two mills of twenty-five shillings and sixteen acres of meadow. Wood for forty pigs, and it is in the King's park.

In the time of King Edward and afterwards it was worth twelve pounds. Now fifteen pounds. Nevertheless the tenant pays fifteen pounds by weight. The sheriff has twenty-five shillings.

Note: The Stoke mentioned is the Stoke in Surrey, Hundred of Wokking.

Domesday Book is the name applied to the "Liber de Wintonia," or Exchequer Domesday. It consists of two volumes — a greater and a less. The Exon D., which contains records of the western counties, forms part of the second volume and is said to be an amplification of the record which appears in the Exchequer D. in condensed form.

All the immediate military tenants of the crown amounted not fully to seven hundred, when Domesdaybook was framed.

3. Provincial; harsh; as, a doric accent.

— Doric architecture, the earliest perfected of the Greek orders. It combines great solidity with extreme delicacy and artistic taste. In this style, as practised in the great age of Greece, all horizontal lines are slightly convex and all vertical lines slightly inclined inward, to correct optical illusion. The columns, which have 20 shallow, sharp-edged channels, have no bases other than the series of steps on which they stand, and their capitals are the plainest of the capitals in the most subtle found in architecture. Sculpture and painting united to glorify the great monuments of this style. An altered and debased imitation became the architecture of the Roman orders, between their so-called Tuscan, itself a debased form of Doric, and Ionic. HAMILTON Metaphysics p. 64. [G. & L. 1859.]

2†. To be afraid. } < F. douter, < L. dubito, be uncer-dout, } tain, < dubius, two.] SYN.: distrust, mistrust, surmise, suspect. To doubt is to lack conviction. Incompleteness of evidence may compel one to doubt, or some perverse bias of mind may lead to it. Doubt is distinguished from surmise by lack of confidence; as, I distrust my own judgment; or it may be nearly equivalent to suspect, as, I distrusted that man from his start. Suspect is a stronger term than one is almost assured of positive evil; one may distrust himself or others; he suspects others. Mistrust is now rarely, if ever, used of persons, but only of motives, intentions, etc. Distrust is always serious; doubt often used playfully. See QUESTION; SUSPECT. Compare synonyms for DOUBT, n.— ANT.: believe, confide in, depend on, depend upon, rely on, rely upon, trust.—to doubt it, I doubt, v., a.—doubt'er, n. One who doubts.—doubt'ing-ly, adv.

[< F. doute, < douter; see DOUBT, v.]

SYN.: distrust, mistrust, hesitancy, hesitation, incredulity, indecision, irresolution, misgiving, perplexity, question, scruple, skepticism, suspense, suspicion, unbelief, uncertainty. Incredulity is either a habit of mind or a belief as a matter of practise. As regards belief, doubt is lack of conviction; disbelief is conviction to the contrary; unbelief refers rather to a settled state of mind, generally accompanied with opposition of heart. Perplexity is active and painful; doubt may be quiescent. Perplexity presses toward a solution; doubt may be content to linger unresolved. Any improbable statement awakens incredulity; scepticism may decide without evidence. Scepticism have a condemnatory force, as implying wilful rejection of manifest truth. As regards practical matters, uncertainty applies to the unknown or undecided; doubt implies some negative evidence. Suspense regards the future, and is eager and anxious; uncertainty may relate to any period, and be quite indifferent. Hesitancy is ordinarily in regard to the outcome of something already done or decided; hesitation, indecision, and irresolution have reference to something that remains to be decided or done, and are due often to impotency of will than to lack of knowledge. Distrust and suspicion apply especially to the motives, character, etc., of others, and are more decidedly adverse than doubt. Scruple relates to matters of conscience and duty.— ANT.: assurance, belief, certainty, conviction, decision, determination, resolution, resolve.—in doubt, subject to doubt; in uncertainty.—no d., a fact publicly set at d., beyond doubt.—without d., with certainty; decidedly.

dra'ma, 1 drā'mȧ; 2 drā'mȧ, [XIII.], n. 1. A composition, in prose or in poetry, usually intended to be acted upon the stage, presenting a story by means of characters speaking and acting in situations contrived to develop a plot, and with such accessories as scenery, stage machinery, costume, etc., as are fitted to produce an impression of reality; play; as, the drama of "Hamlet."

The miracle play, or mystery, formed the first stage of the English drama. It was started in churches and monasteries, either by the clergy or by persons coached by them. Gradually this was displaced by the morality play, from which dates the second stage of the drama. (Compare MIRACLE-PLAY; MORALITY; MYSTERY.) The drama assumes two principal forms, tragedy and comedy, the former representing some signal event or period and generally tending in all its parts to a fatal issue, the latter presenting the lighter and usually humorous aspects of character and life, individual and social. Minor forms of drama are occasionally tragi-comedy, burlesque, melodrama, etc. The usual division of a drama is into acts (ordinarily from three to five) and scenes.

(2) The forward and backward movements of the mule-carriage. 9. [U. S.] A ravine usually dry, but forming a watercourse in a freshet, furrowed vertically by torrents. 10. The forming of a mineral from ore/coal from cover. 11. Anything that draws or produces drawing; specif., a play or an exhibition that attracts a crowd. 12. A quantity drawn. 13. Geol. A valley or basin readily convertible into an irrigation-reservoir by constructing a dam across its outlet. 14. Hort. A new shoot or bud; a sprout, as of the sweet potato. 15. Mech. Angle or taper; draft. 16. The strength of tea. 17. [Slang.] Some means by which a person is induced to disclose his intentions or his secret knowledge. 18. [Colloq.] Drawpoker.

— draw'arch', n. The movable part or span of a drawbridge.— d.-arm, n. Print. A device for drawing the roller carriage, beds, or platen of a platen press.— d.-bar, n. 1. A bar or heavy beam under the body of a railway-car, and projecting at the ends, for coupling cars. Some arrangement for coupling is placed at the outer end, and an arrangement of springs at the inner end, to lessen recoil in starting/coupling. 2. (C. S.) The bar of a frame that can be removed.— d.-bays, n. A kind of shoe-lasting. d.-baizet.— d.-beam, n. A windlass.— d.-bench, n. An apparatus in which wire is drawn from rods by pulling them through successively smaller openings in hard plates.— d.-bolt, n. A coupling-pin.— draw'bore", v. To make a draw-bore in.— d.-bore, n. A hole passing through a tenon and the cheeks of its mortise, to enable the former to be drawn up to its shoulder by driving in a pin.— d.-bowl, n. A wooden calender-roll, designed to draw cloth from a bleaching-field.— d.-box, n. In cottonmachinery, a combination of rollers used for drawing or reducing the diameter of the roving.— d.-boy, n. 1. A boy who helps a weaver to actuate the hand-controlled pattern-weaving. 2. A mechanical device for the same purpose.— d.-cut, n. A sliding cut.— d.-dock, n. An inlet in the bank of a river, serving as a dock.— d.-gate, n. A drag-valve.— d.-gear, n. 1. The apparatus by which railway-cars are coupled. 2. The harness of a draft-horse.— d.-glove, n. Same as DRAWING-GLOVE.— d.-head, n. 1. In spinning, an apparatus for giving an additional twist in lengthening slivers. 2. The head of a draw-bar. 3. That portion of a tensile-strength testing machine to which the actual pull is applied.— d.-hole, n. A hole in a furnace through which the spent ore is removed.— d.-hook, n. A hook on the end of a railway draw-bar.— d.-horse, n. A trestle-like stool with a T saw on it to clamp or otherwise hold the work on which a draw-knife is being used.— d.-iron, n. The attachment at the end of a shaft by which it is connected to a sleigh.— d.-knife, n. A drawing-knife.— draw'latch", n. A thief or sneak-thief.— d.-lid, n. A sliding lid.— d.-link, n. A link for coupling cars.— d.-loom, n. 1. An old form of loom for weaving figured designs. 2. A kind of damask woven on the draw-loom.— d.-net, n. 1. A seine. 2. A net with wide meshes, for catching birds.— d.-pit, n. A pit built in a furnace wherein the treated ore is received.— d.-plate, n. 1. The plate on a locomotive to which the draw-bar is attached. 2. A hard plate with holes of successively diminishing diameters for drawing out metal rods or wire.— d.-point, n. A dry-point.— d.-poker, n. A game of cards. See POKER.— d.-rod, n. Railroad. A rod uniting the draw-bars of adjacent cars.— d.-seine, n. A seine capable of being pursued.— d.-shave, n. A drawing-knife.— d.-shot, n. Billiards. 1. [U. S.] A shot in which the cue-ball, by being struck under repulsion, is drawn away from the object-ball toward the striker. 2. [Eng.] A screw-back stroke.— d.-spring, n. 1. A spring opposing the extension or compression of a draw-bar. 2. A device to counteract recoil when a gun is fired.— d.-stop, n. The knob by which a set of organ-pipes is opened; a stop-knob.— d.-taper, n. Founding. A taper given to a pattern to permit its being withdrawn easily from the mold.— de-liv'er-y; draf'i-.— d.-timber, n. One of a pair of timbers extending from the platform end-sills of a car to the body-bolster, and containing between them the draw-bar and attachments.— d.-tongs, n. pl. Pincers by which to pull wire through draw-plate holes.— d.-tube, n. The tube, consisting of two sliding parts, containing the lenses of a microscope.— d.-well, n. 1. A well from which water is drawn by cord and bucket, or by some similar device. 2. A deep drawer in a desk or cabinet.— sand-d., n. A watercway filled with sand immediately above a subterranean stream.— spread d. (Billiards), a shot in which the cue-ball is struck low on the side so that it draws off from the object-ball to the right or left side, instead of returning direct.

draw'back", [dr3'bak"; 2 drą'bāk", n. 1. Anything that checks or hinders progress, success, prosperity, enjoyment, contentment, or the like; a disadvantage; as, poverty is a drawback to a student; envy is a drawback to friendship; the heat was a drawback to the picnic.

Wide of the mark ev'n for a madman's dream.
Tennyson Queen Mary act v, sc. 3.

3. A figure or object seen in a vision. 4. Something of exotic beauty or charm such as is ordinarily seen only in dreams. [ME. drem, < AS. drēam (cp. OS. drōm, dream), < Germanic stem draumo-, for draugmo-; cp. Ice. draugr, fantom, ghost.]

Syn.: day-dream, fancy, hallucination, reverie, romance, trance, vision. A dream occurs during sleep; a vision when one is awake; a trance in an abnormal state, which is different from normal sleep or wakefulness. Vision is often applied to something mentally perceived, as through supernatural agency, whether in sleep or wakefulness, and conceived as more real and authoritative than a dream. A reverie is the purposeless drifting of the mind when awake, under the influence of mental images; a day-dream that which passes before the mind in such condition. A fancy is some image presented to the mind, often in the fullest exercise of its powers. Hallucination is the seeming perception of non-existent objects, as in insanity or delirium. In the figurative sense, we speak of dreams of fortune, visions of glory, with little difference of meaning except that the vision is thought of as fuller and more vivid. We speak of a trance of delight when the emotion almost sweeps one away from the normal exercise of the faculties.—Ant.: certainty, fact, reality, realization, substance, verity.

Dred Scott Case. U. S. Hist. A claim for the freedom of a negro slave. Dred Scott, who lived with his owner, Dr. Emerson, in Missouri, but was taken by him to Illinois and Minnesota, then free soil, and lived there from 1834 to 1838, but was taken back to Missouri in the latter year. Scott brought suit in 1846, claiming the status of a freeman through residence in free territory. The Supreme Court of Missouri denied the claim (1852), holding that on his return to a slave State his status as a slave still held. The case, involving a question under the Federal laws and Constitution, was brought, in 1854, before the Federal Circuit Court, which held that Scott was a citizen of Missouri and could be a party to a suit before a Federal court, but decided the suit against him. However, in 1857 the United States Supreme Court, Chief Justice Taney presiding, reversed this decision, holding that under the form of government then existing a negro "had no rights which the white man was bound to respect and that the negro might justly and lawfully be reduced to slavery for his benefit."

Drey"fus', 1 drī"fŭs'; 2 drę"fŭs', Alfred (1859–). A French artillery officer of Jewish descent, chief figure in the sensational Dreyfus affair, which convulsed France. It began with his arrest on Oct. 15, 1894, on the charge of having sold military secrets to a foreign power, then generally believed to have been Germany or Italy, while the governments of those countries denied dealing with him. He was court-martialed and convicted mainly on the strength of a bordereau forged by Captain Esterhazy, and was publicly degraded and sentenced to solitary confinement. He was transported to Devil's Island, where he was treated with great severity. His case nearly caused a rupture between France and Germany, and disclosed widespread corruption in the French army, and gave rise to an outburst of anti-Semitism. On June 2, 1899, Major Esterhazy, who had been dismissed from the army for a theft, broke in this affair, confessed the authorship of the bordereau and a new court martial was convened. Dreyfus was again convicted, but was recommended to mercy and pardoned by President Loubet on Sept. 19, 1899. Dreyfus's innocence was fully established at a retrial in 1906, and he was restored to his full rank (major) in the army and on the next day on which he suffered degradation he was decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honor.

Railroad.* That part of a railroad yard in which freight-cars are received, reclassified and dispatched.

PARTIAL LIST OF DRILLS.

[Other names of drills, not listed or defined here, will be found under their first elements.]

Drills for boring are variously named, as from their construction, arrangement, mode of operation, shape, purpose, place of use, the tool with which they are used, or the article or material operated upon;

as, auger-d. (twisted), bench-d., bone-d., bow-d. (worked with a bow; used chiefly by jewelers and watchmakers), brace-d., breast-d., burr-d. (dental), calyx-d. (for rock-boring), center-d. (for making a central hole, as in a shaft, to accommodate the lathe-center), centrifugal d. (having a fly-wheel), churn-d. (percussion), clutch-d. (having a ratchet), cotter-d. (for cutting cotter-seats), cylinder-d., dentist, dentistry, cramp-d. (having a cramp to hold it to the work), diamond-d. (diamond-pointed, rock or dental), expanding d. (having spreading bits), fiddle, or fiddle-bow d. (a bow-drill), finishing-d. (for smoothing or reaming), fire-d. (see under FIRE), fluted d., fly-d. (centrifugal), half-round d., hand-d., H d. (H-shaped point), horizontal d., jump-d., or jumping d. (percussion), key-seat d. (to countersink), lever-d. (having a lever to hold it to the work), lip-d. (having a cutting lip), nerve-d. (dental), paddy-d. (having adjustable cutters for boring reeds), percussion-d. (for rocks; operated by repeated blows), pillar-d. (see DRILLING-MACHINE, below), pin-d. (having a central pin, for countersinking), pivot-d., (watchmakers') push d. (made by pointing a steel rod, for common work), pneumatic d. (operated by air), post-d. (attached to a post), pump-d. (operated like a pump-handle), ratchet-d. (worked by a ratchet), rock-d., rose-d. (having rose-shaped cutting edges),— rotary d. (in which the spindle rotates), shot-d. (for cutting exceedin ly hard rock by the use of steel shot in the rotating tube), slide-d. (worked by a sliding stock to make a slot), socket-d. (fitting into a socket), stop-d. (having a collar to regulate the depth), string-d. (worked with a string; used for light drilling), suspension-d. (hung overhead), tapping-d. (for drilling into a main or pipe), tire-d. (for wheel-tires), tit-d. or teat-d. (having a nit, for countersinking), traverse-d. (having a traversing or lateral motion, for slotting), twist-d., vertical d., wall-d. (attached to a wall), watchmakers' d., wimble-d., etc.

drill, n. Short twilled linen or cotton cloth. [< DRILLING².] drills‡.

drill, n. A black-faced baboon (Cynocephalus leucophæus) of West Africa, similar to the mandrill.

drill'er, 1 dril'ėr; 2 dril'ėr, n. 1. One who or that which drills. 2. A drilling-machine.

drill'et, 1 dril'ėt; 2 dril'ėt, n. Acorn-cups from the valonia-oak (Quercus ægilops), used by tanners.

drilling, 1 dril'ing; 2 dril'ing, n. 1. Material excavated by a drill; as, the drillings of an Artesian well. 2. The act of using a drill.— drill'ing-clip", n. A clip for holding a drill against a pipe in tapping.— d.-frame, n. A drill-holding device, as for a drill-press, especially one contrived to maintain a constant and smooth thrust on the tool.— d.-jig, n. 1. A hand-power portable drilling-machine. 2. A drilling-template.— d.-lathe, n. A drilling-machine having horizontal ways like a lathe.— d.-machine, n. A machine for boring or drilling. It may be portable, in which case there are several drilling-tools, the distance between which is adjustable, and which may operate at once; (2) pillar, in which a vertical post bears a table with adjustable height (see illus. DRILL-PRESS); (3) radial, in which the tool is on a horizontal swinging arm and may thus cover any point within a circle; or (4) turret, with which a variety of operations may be performed upon a piece of work without removing it.— d.-screw, n. A screw fitted with apparatus for boring or excavating rocks under water.— d.-stabs, n. That part of a drilling-machine arranged to hold an object in position while being drilled.

a, c, cone-pulleys; d, drill; h, holding-apparatus for adjusting the height of table; l, lever-feed; p, post; s, spindle; t, table for holding the work dowsing to switching purposes, work to be drilled; u, as in a drill-yard.— d.-yard, n. Railroad. That part of a railroad yard in which freight-cars are received, reclassified and dispatched.

Multiple-spindle Drill-press.

a, cone-pulleys; b, feed-clutch lever, for throwing the feed in and out of engagement; c, gearing operating the spindles (d), and the feed-screw (e); f, drilling-head; g, table for holding the work to be drilled; h, pulley carrying the clutch operated by the traverse-lever (i), which gives a rapid traverse motion to the drilling-head to and from the work.

Young Black-faced Drill.

drill'ing², n. A very firm twilled fabric of linen or cotton; drill. [< G. drillich, < OHG. drilth, < L. trilix, of three threads, < tri-, three, + licium, thread.]

— drill'ing-twill', n. Same as DRILLING.

dri'min, 1 drol'min; 2 dri'min, n. The chemical principle ($C_{30}H_{50}O$) occurring in the bark of Drimys winteri. See table under BARK. [< Gr. drimys, bitter.]

dri'mol, 1 drol'mōl or -mol; 2 dri'mōl or -mol, n. Chem. A colorless crystalline compound ($C_{15}H_{26}O$) occurring in the leaves of Drimys winteri. [< Gr. drimys, bitter, + -OL.]

Dri'mys, 1 drol'mis; 2 dri'mis, n. A small genus of magnoliaceous shrubs and trees mostly natives of the southern hemisphere. D. winteri yields the medicinal Winter's bark of commerce.

> Whose ship is driving o'er the driving sea?
> CAMPBELL Come, Come Home Come Home! st. 5.

2. To press forward furiously; as, the wind drives against the sails. 3. To ride in a vehicle drawn by horses or other animals, or to direct or control the animals that draw it; as, he drives regularly from riding on horseback; as, do you ride or drive to-day?

Subtle distinctions are made in the use of this word, more especially in England: an Englishman drives, even when he does not hold the reins and guide the horses, if the vehicle in which he is conveyed (especially if for pleasure) be one in which an English gentleman might be supposed to drive the horses himself, as in a pony-carriage, a dog-cart, or the like; but he does not drive in a coach unless its form and purpose bring it within the class of vehicles already named. Still less does he drive in a public conveyance.

The distinction between the two words—riding and driving—which a pseudo-fashion has attempted to establish, both in England and the United States, is mere pedantry, without a sense of philological authority.
GOUDY Good Eng. p. 84. [W. & W. 1897.]

4. To aim a blow; hence, to strive to accomplish a certain end: with at; as, what is the man driving at?

Whose ship is driving o'er the driving sea!
Song of the Sons of Odin, Come Home! st. 5.

2. To press forward furiously; as, the wind drives against the sails. 3. To ride in a vehicle drawn by horses or other animals, or to direct or control the animals that draw it: as, physicians drive from riding on horseback; as, do you ride or drive to-day?

Subtle distinctions are made in the use of this word, more especially in England. An Englishman drives, even when he does not ride, and rides and guides the horses, if also vehicle in which he is conveyed (especially if for pleasure) be one in which an English gentleman might be supposed to drive the horses himself, as a phaeton, barouche, or the like; but he does not drive in a coach unless its form and purpose bring it within the class of vehicles already named. Still less does he drive in a public conveyance.

The distinction between the two words — riding and driving — which a pseudo-fashion has attempted to establish, both in England and in the United States, is mere pedantry, without a pretense of philological authority.

4. To aim a blow; hence, to strive to accomplish a certain end: with at; as, what is the man driving at?

5. To labor diligently and persistently; with away; as, he is driving away at his work. 6†. To distrain property. [< AS. drifan.] Syn.: impel, propel, push, repel, ride, thrust, urge on. To drive is to move an object with some force or violence before one; to impel is the direct opposite of draw, tend, etc. A man leads a horse by the halter, drives him with whip and rein. We drive in a carriage, ride upon a horse: in the former case we ride in a chariot (2 Kings ix, 16; Jer. xvii. 25, etc.): good examples of the same usage may be found elsewhere. One may be driven to a thing or from it: hence, drive is a common equality for compel and for repel or repulse. See ACCELERATE; ACTUATE; BANISH; COMPEL; REPEL. — ANT.: see synonyms for DRAW. — Prep.: drive to one's door, drive to one's estate; from one's presence; out of the city; drive by, with, or under the lash; drive by or past beautiful estates; along the beach; beside the river; through the park; across the field; around the square; to the door; into the barn; out of the sunshine; away from. — drive'-boat", n. A striker-boat. — d.-bolt, n. 1. Pope . . . ascribes to women a dualism of passions, — love of pleasure and love of power. DE QUINCEY Essays on the Poets, Pope p. 205, note. [fr. a. ɪ. 1859.]

2. A system or theory which asserts a radical duality or twofoldness of nature, being, or operation. In the history of reflective thinkers of continuous lines are developed, which are to some extent interdependent but are not identical, according to the subject-matter of reflection. These are (1) theological dualism, or the doctrine that there are two eternal and opposing principles, or divine beings, one good and the other evil. This view was characteristic of Zoroastrianism and certain Gnostic systems, but is opposed by monistic religions like Christianity and Mohammedanism. A special form arose in early Christian controversy, in the doctrine attributed to Nestorius, which held that the Logos dwelt in Jesus as a distinct person, thus regarding Christ as having two personalities, rather than as being one divine-human person. (2) Philosophical dualism, or the theory which considers the ultimate being of the universe, or "World-Ground," to be twofold or to be constituted of two independent and irreducible elements, as opposed either to idealistic or materialistic monism. (3) Psychological or psychophysical dualism, the theory that the body and mind of man are two different existences but are placed by the order of nature in a most intimate system of correlations or interactions, as opposed to parallelism or the monistic theories of subjective idealism or psychophysical materialism. (4) Ethical dualism, or the system of morals which demands and justifies one kind of conduct toward one's fellows in the same social group and another kind of conduct toward other men: in early society, the observance of opposing obligations toward fellow-clansmen and strangers respectively.

(2) An issue of an instrument or document to replace one lost or destroyed. du-plic'a-ment†.

Syn.: copy, counterpart, ectype, facsimile, imitation, replica, reproduction, transcript, etc. A copy is as nearly like the original as the copyist has power to make it: a duplicate is exactly like the original; a carbon copy of a typewritten document must be a duplicate, if the copyist have an incorrect copy, but never an inaccurate duplicate. An ectype is an imitation or reproduction of an original. A facsimile is like the original in appearance. A replica is like the original in substance and effect: a facsimile of the Declaration of Independence is not a duplicate. A facsimile of a law report differs from a transcript in that the same does not attempt to reproduce the original. In law, a copy of an instrument is a transcript; no signatures, attestations, or seal or other matters, may be copied; a duplicate is really an original, containing the same provisions and signed by the same persons, so that it may have the force of an original. One can obtain a transcript is an official copy, authenticated by the signature of the proper officer, and by the seal of the appropriate court. While strictly there could be but one duplicate, it is usual to execute several, each indicating number of exact copies. Reproduction is chiefly applied to living organisms.— Ant.: archetype, model, original, pattern, prototype.

12†. A fee; compensation. [< DUE.] due'tet; due'teet.

Syn.: business, obligation, responsibility, right, righteousness. Etymologically, duty is that which is owed or due; obligation, that to or by which one is bound; right, that which is correct, straight, or in the direct line of truth and goodness; responsibility, that for which one must answer. Duty and responsibility are thought of as to some person or persons; right is impersonal. One's duty may be to others or to himself; his obligations and responsibilities are to others. Duty arises from the nature of things; obligation and responsibility may be created by circumstances, as by one's own promise, or by the acceptance of a trust, etc. We speak of a parent's duty, a debtor's obligation; or of a child's duty of obedience, and a parent's responsibility for the child's welfare. Right is that which accords with the moral system of the universe. Righteousness is right incarnated in action. In a more limited sense, right may be used of what one may rightly claim, and so be the converse of duty. It is the creditor's right to demand payment, and the debtor's duty to pay. See BUSINESS.

— countervailing duty. Econ. 1. A duty on imports compensating for an excise on similar goods of domestic manufacture. 2. A duty on certain imports to counterbalance the subsidies granted to foreign manufactures by their respective governments.— du'ty-free", a. Free from customs duties.— d.-proof, a. Bearing a mark employed in the Chinese customs that insures goods having already paid duty from further impost.— German d. [U. S.], a rebate or remission of duty made by the German government when German manufactured goods are withdrawn from bond for export; an element of dutiable value of the merchandise brought into the United States.— indicated d., the work done by a steam-engine, per unit of fuel or of steam, as determined by an indicator.— in d., at one's post; fulfilling one's office or service.— to hire one's d. (U. S. Army), to hire another to perform one's duties; engage a substitute. For this offense both parties are punishable by court martial.

du-um'vir, 1 diu-um'vər; 2 dū-ŭm'vir, n. [-VI-RI, 1 -vı-rai; 2 -vi-rī, or -VIRS, 1 -vərz; 2 -vĭrṣ, pl.] Rom. Hist. One of two magistrates holding an office jointly, as the chief magistrates of a provincial municipality. [L., < duo, two, + vir, man.]— du-um'vi-ral, a. Pertaining to duumviri.— du-um'vi-rate, n. The joint office of duumviri. du-um'vi-ra-cy‡ [Rare].

Du-val', 1 diū-val'; 2 dū-văl', n. 1. A county in N. E. Florida; 822 sq. m.; county-seat, Jacksonville. 2. A county in S. central Texas; 1,887 sq. m.; county-seat, San Diego.

Du"ver"gier' de Hau"ranne', 1 dü"ver"ʒē' də ō"ran'; 2 dü"vĕr"zhe' de ō"răn' (8/3 1798–5/19 1881). A French publicist and historian.

du've-tyn, 1 dū'və-tīn; 2 dụ've-tȳn, n. Any one of several plush-like fabrics used for making dresses, etc.: a trade name.

dux, 1 duks; 2 dŭks, n. [DU'CES, 1 diū'siz; 2 dū'çēṣ, pl.] [L.] 1. A leader; specif. [Scot. & Eng.], the head or leader of a class in a school. 2. Mus. The subject or principal melody of a fugue: distinguished from the comes or answer.

Dux'bur-y, 1 duks'ber-ı; 2 dŭks'bĕr-y, n. A village in Plymouth county, Mass.

Duyck'ink, 1 dalk'ink; 2 dȳk'ink, Evert Augustus (11/12 1816–8/11 1878). An American writer; founded Literary World, published with his brother, George L. (16/17 1823–3/4 1863), a Cyclopedia of American Literature.

du'zine, 1 dü'zin; 2 dü'zin, n. [New York.] In the Dutch period, a village government of twelve men. [< D. dozijn, < OF. dozaine; see DOZEN.]

dval'ism, 1 dvul'iz; 2 dvul'iz, n. [Sans.] Duality; dualism in philosophy: the assertion of dual principles, as of God and nature, spirit and matter. dval'ist.

Dva-lin'n, 1 dvȧ-lin'; 2 dvȧ-lin', n. Norse Myth. 1. See DAAIN. 2. A dwarf named by Odin as an inventor of runes. Dva-linn't.

Dva-pa'ra-Yu'ga, 1 dvȧ-pä'rȧ-yö'gȧ; 2 dvä-pä'rȧ-yu'gȧ, n. [Sans.] The age in which, according to the Hindus, righteousness diminished by half; the third or brazen age, consisting of 2,400 years. Dwa-pa'ri.

D. V. H., abbr. Diploma in Veterinary Hygiene.

Dvi'na, 1 dvi'nȧ; 2 dvi'nȧ, n. A river in Vologda government, N. Russia; length, 700 m. to White Sea. Dwi'na‡ [Rus.].

Dvinsk, 1 dvinsk; 2 dvinsk, n. See DÜNABURG.

dvi'pa, 1 dvi'pȧ; 2 dvi'pa, n. [Sans.] 1. An island; peninsula. 2. An asylum; refuge. 3. One of the divisions of the terrestrial world; a cycle. The number of the dvipas is variously given as four, nine, seven, or thirteen, each division being circumscribed by an ocean.

D. V. M., D. V. M. S., etc. See DEGREE.

Dvoř'ák 1 dvōr'zȧk; 2 dvōr'zhȧk, Antonin (9/11 1841–6/7 1904). A Bohemian composer; director N. Y. National Conservatory, 1892–1895; Stabat Mater, etc.

d. w., abbr. Dead weight.

dwa'ble, 1 dwē'bl; 2 dwā'bl, a. [Scot. or Ir.] Pliable; delicate; dwale, 1 dwāl; 2 dwāl, n. [Prov. Eng.] To mutter in delirium. dwall‡; dwaul‡; dwaule‡; dwele.

dwalc, n. 1. Her. Sable. 2. The deadly nightshade. 3†. An opiate; sleeping-potion. 4†. Delusion; hallucination. [< AS. dwala, error, stupefaction, < dwelan; see DWELL.]

dwam, 1 dwām; 2 dwām, v. [Scot.] To go off in a faint; fall sick.

dwang, 1 dwan; 2 dwäng, n. 1. [Scot.] A strut inserted between floor-timbers to stiffen them. 2. A large bar•wrench for tightening nuts. 3. A masons' measuring bar. [Cp. D. dwingen (v.), force.]

dwa-ra'ca, 1 dwȧ-rä'kȧ; 2 dwä-rä'ca, n. A town in Kathiawar Peninsula, Bombay; temple of Krishna. Dwar'ka‡.

dwarf, 1 dwȯrf; 2 dwarf, v. I. i. 1. To keep below the natural development; stunt; as, the child was dwarfed by neglect.

You dwarf the remaining faculties when you develop one to abnormal size and strength. A. K. H. BOYD Recreations of a Country Parson vol. ii, p. 222. [c. a. co. 1870.

2. To cause to look small by comparison.

The figures of warriors and statesmen were dwarfed by the grander figures of poets and philosophers. GREEN Short Hist. Eng. People ǂ 7, p. 423. [s. 1875.]

II. t. To grow smaller; become stunted.

dwarf, a. Smaller than others of its kind or species; diminutive; stunted; as, a dwarf ash.—dwarf dove, a small American ground-dove of the genus Chamæpelia.—d. ear, auricle small (Otiniidæ).—d. elder, the danewort (Sambucus ebulus).—d. lemur, a small lemurid (Microcebus) of Madagascar.—d. male. 1. Bot. Same as MICRANDER. 2. Crust. A minute male much smaller than the female, as in cirripeds and parasitic isopods.—d. pear, a small kind of pear•tree produced usually by budding on a quince stock.—d. rafter, a short rafter in the hip of a roof.—d. snake, any small calamarine snake.—d. wall enclosing a court, above which is an iron railing. 2. Any low wall.

dwarf, n. 1. An organism smaller than is common to its species or kind; a person, animal, or plant that is unnaturally small or has been arrested in development, esp. an adult human being less than 4 feet tall. 2. Myth. One of numerous diminutive beings, usually ugly and malevolent, considered by Northern archeologists as remnants of the inland tribes of North Europe before the advent of the Odinic immigration from Asia. Specif. (Norse Myth.), skilful mechanical craftsmen in metal-working, who inhabited rocky caverns, being driven there by the Asas: secondly said to have originated as maggots in the body of the slain giant Ymer. [< AS. dweorh.] — dwarf'ling, n. A very little dwarf.

The vegetation, as might be supposed, is scant, or at least dwarfish. POE The Raven [U. S. n. s. 1880.]

2. Insignificant; petty. dwarf'y‡.—ly, adv.—ness, n.

dwaum, 1 dwōm; 2 dwam, vi. [Scot.] To decline in health.

dwell, 1 dwel; 2 dwel, n. [DWELT or DWELLED, DWELT or DWELLING.] I. i. 1. To live as a settled resident; have a fixed abode or habitation; reside: with an adverb or adverbial clause or place; as, to dwell in a city, on a hill, by a stream. 2. To linger, as in thought or discussion; expatiate; pause or tarry: usually with on or upon; (of a horse) to halt or linger before taking a fence. 3‡. To delay. 4‡. To live; exist; be. 5. [Archaic or Obs.] To remain, continue in a state or place. II†. t. 1. To cause to dwell; implant. 2. To inhabit. [< AS. dwellan, caus. of dwelan, be dull, err.] SYN.: see ABIDE.

dwell, n. 1. Mech. The short cessation of motion of a part of a machine to effect its allotted service; as, in a platen printing-press, the remaining of a form against the impression-surface for a short period; as, the press has a long dwell. 2. Stoppage; delay; pause.

dwell'er, 1 dwel'er; 2 dwēl'er, n. One who has a settled place of abode; a permanent resident; inhabitant.

dwell'ing, 1 dwel'in; 2 dwēl'ing, n. 1. A house occupied as a residence; a building used for human habitation; dwelling-house; family abode. 2. [Archaic.] Abode; dwelling-place. 3†. Delay. SYN.: see EDIFICE; HOME; HOUSE.—dwell'ing-house", n. A house built for habitation; a dwelling. In law it may embrace the dwelling itself and such buildings as are used in connection with it.—d.-place, n. An abiding-place; habitation.

Dwen'di, 1 dwen'di; 2 dwēn'di, n. pl. [P. L.] The gods of the Taghanuas, supposed to live in caves.

The Dwendi, which have the form of men, live in caves, and are very powerful. D. C. WORCESTER Philippine Islands p. 497. [MACM. '01.]

dwerg'mal, 1 dwerg'mal; 2 dwērg'māl, n. Norse Saga. An echo; literally, dwarf-language, the echoing rocks being the supposed dwellings of the dwarfs.

dwī, 1 dwī; 2 dwī, n. [Newfoundland & Nova Scotia.] A light wind following a calm and sufficient to give a vessel steerage-way. CAPT. HOLDSWORTH in Letter to Standard Dict. Dec. 20, 1902.

Dwight, 1 dwīt; 2 dwīt, n. 1. Theodore William (7/11 1822–8/11 1892), an American judge and professor; author of lawbooks. 2. Timothy (14/15 1752–1/11 1817), an American Congregational divine, poet, and scholar; grandson of Jonathan Edwards; 22 years president of Yale; Theology Explained and Defended. 3. Timothy (11/12 1828–1/11 1916), an American educator, philologist, lexicographer, and commentator; president of Yale University, 1886–1899. 4. A village in Livingston county, Ill. 5. A city in Morris county, Kansas. 6. A village in Knox county, Neb.

Dwi'na, n. Same as DVINA.

dwin'dle, 1 dwin'dl; 2 dwin'dl, v. [DWIN'DLED, DWIN'-dwin'dl'ed, | DLD?; DWIN'DLING.] I. i. To make smaller; cause to shrink. II. t. To waste or fall away; become less, gradually or apparently; as, estate dwindles by waste; an object dwindles as it recedes from view.

The thirteen millions of treasure . . . dwindled down to the contents of a hundred wagons. W. T. SHERMAN Memoirs vol. ii, p. 373. [A. 1875.]

2. To fall away from a normal or proper condition; degenerate: sink. [Freq. of DWINE, < AS. dwinan, pine away.] SYN.: see DECLINE, diminish, fall off, pine, waste.—dwin'dlement, n. [Rare.] The act or process of dwindling; decline. dwin'dler, n.

dwine, 1 dwain; 2 dwīn, vi. [PROV. SCOT. or Archaic] To pine or waste away; languish.—dwine, n. Decline.—dwin'ing, a. His sickened sisters and nurse, and dried and dwined away. SIDNEY LANIER Boy's King Arthur bk. vi, p. 398. [s. 1880.]

dwi'pa, 1 dwī'pȯ; 2 dwī'pa, n. Same as DVIPA.

Dwy'er, 1 dwī'er; 2 dwī'er, Michael (1771–1826). A daring Irish rebel who in 1798 and 1803 defied the English in the Wicklow mountains.

Dy. Dysprosium: a chemical symbol.

dy'ad, 1 dai'ad; 2 dȳ'ad, a. 1. Chem. Having a combining power of two units; bivalent. 2. Same as DYADIC.

dy'ad, n. 1. A pair of units; duad. 2. Chem An atom, radical, or element that has a combining power of two units. See VALENCE. 3. Math. The symbols of two vectors not joined by a sign: used as an operator in vector analysis. 4. Embryol. One of a pair of chromosomes, especially in the prophases of the second (homeotypic) division in gametogenesis. See TETRAD. 5. Morphology. A secondary unit made up of an aggregate of monads. [< LL. dyas (dyad-), < Gr. dyas (dyad-), < dyo, two.] — dy'ad-deme", n. Biol. An aggregate of dyads, intermediate between monad-deme and triad-deme.

Dyak Chief in full War-costume.

dy-ad'ic, 1 dai-ad'ik; 2 dȳ-ad'ic, a. I. Or pertaining to a dyad. 2. Based on or relating to the number 2; binary. 3. Gr. Pros. Composed of two different rhythms or two units of terms. dy'ad-i.—dy-adic arithmetic, binary arithmetic. See BINARY.

dy-ad'ic, n. Math. 1. In vector analysis an operator consisting of a combination of dyads. 2. Dyadic arithmetic. — complete dyadic (Math.), a dyadic which can be reduced to a sum of not less than three dyads.

dy-ad'ics, 1 dai-ad'iks; 2 dȳ-ad'ics, n. Math. The mathematical theory of objects determinable in two alternative ways, both of which can not be used at once; as the pure mathematical theory of necessary reasoning, in which every proposition must be either false or true.

Dy'ak, 1 dī'ak; 2 dȳ'ȧk, n. One of the aboriginal race of Borneo, probably akin to the Malays, but differing from them in language, race, and customs. See illus. above.

dy'a-kis-do"dec-a-he'dron, n. Crystal. Same as DIDODECAHEDRON.—dy'a-kis-do"dec-a-he-dr'al, a. Of or pertaining to a diploid.—dy'a-kis-hex'a-con-ta-he'dron, n. A solid having 120 faces. [< Gr. dyakis, = dis (see DI-), + DODECAHEDRON, etc.

dy'ar-chal, 1 dai'ar-kl; 2 dȳ'ȧr-cȧl, n. Same as DYARCHY: less authoritative spelling.

dy'ar-chy, 1 dai'ar-ki; 2 dȳ'ȧr-cy, n. Same as DYARCHY: less authoritative spelling.

Dy'as, 1 dai'as; 2 dȳ'ȧs, n. Geol. The Permian; from its division into two groups. [< LL. dyas; see DYAD.] — Dy-as'sic, a.

Dyaus, 1 dyaus; 2 dyous, n. [Sans.] Hind. Myth. The god of the sky, and therefore of rain. Compare ZEUS. Dyaus'pi-trī.

dyce, 1 dais; 2 dȳc, adv. [Rare.] Naut. "Hold her;" "Keep her so": a command to the helmsman to hold his course, as when a vessel is close-hauled: usually in the fuller form, "Dyce, no higher."

Dyce, 1 dais; 2 dȳc, William (9/11 1806–7/11 1864). A Scottish historian and painter; frescoes at Buckingham Palace and Osborne; Jacob and Rachel.

Dych'tau, 1 dik'tau; 2 dȳc'tou, n. A mountain in the Caucasus mountains, Russia; 16,388 ft. high.

dy'dal, 1 dal'dal; 2 dȳ'dal, n. [Local, Eng.] A spade, the dīdle.

dye', 1 dai; 2 dȳ, v. [DYED; DYE'ING.] I. t. 1. To fix a color in the substance of, especially in matter, usually boiling; impregnate with color; as, to dye cloth. 2. To color, as wood, by staining with a coloring-matter; tinge; stain. II. i. To take color in the process of dyeing; as, that cloth dyes well. 2. To follow the dyers' trade. [< AS. dēagian, < dēag, dye, color, < dēagan, color, tinge.] SYN.: see STAIN.—dyed in the wool [U. S.], dyed deeply; completely pervaded; ingrained.—to dye in the grain, to impregnate completely with color; ingrain.

dye', n. 1. A fluid used for dyeing, or a substance for preparing such a fluid by solution; coloring-matter. 2. A color produced by or as by dyeing; tinge; hue.

[< AS. dēag; see DYE, v.] — dye'-bath", n. A solution of coloring-matter for dyeing.—dye-becks, = leather-manuf. A receptacle containing the dye into which the skins are dipped.—dye-leaves, n. pl. In the indigo-dyery (Ilex glabra). 2. The sweetleaf (Symplocos tinctoria).—dye-pine, n. Same as KING-PINE.—dye'stone", n. An iron limestone, used as a dye.—dye'stuff", n. Any material for dyeing. dye'ware", n. Dyers' material, or a test for determining the value of a dye.—dye'weed", n. Dyer's broom.—dye'wood", n. A wood that yields dyestuff.—dye-works, n. pl. An establishment where dyeing is done.

Dyes are divided into two general classes, NATURAL and ARTIFICIAL. Up to the middle of the 19th century natural dyes, made chiefly from vegetable materials, were used exclusively. In 1856 Dr. William Henry Perkin succeeded in producing from coal-tar an artificial dye which he called mauve. Further experimentation resulted in the development of the aniline dyes, which were followed by an enormous number of artificial dyestuffs derived from coal-tar. These have now almost entirely supplanted the natural dyes. See table above.

Dyes are further subdivided: (1) according to the way they are used, or their properties; as, mordant dyes (those with which mordants are used), vat dyes, develop-

CLASSES OF DYES.

NAMES.	Description.	Examples.
ac'id dyes	Dye wool and silk (rarely cotton) with acid bath. Include sulfonated basic colors, azo-sulfonic acids, and nitro compounds	anilin blue
a-liz'a-rin dyes	Chiefly anthracene derivatives, closely related to natural dyestuffs; producing very fast colors	alizarin maroon
am'i-do-az'o dyes	A division of azo dyes; primary aromatic amins; combining with phenols and amins like the simpler amins	amido-azo-benzene
an'i-lin dyes	Made chiefly from triphenyl-methane, anilin being used in making most of them	rosolan
an'thra-cene dyes	Include a large number of coal-tar dyes, acid and mordant; the anthracene being frequently obtained from petroleum residues in manufacturing illuminating gas	alizarin brown azo'dyes	Include numerous dyes, prepared by the diazo reaction. See AMIDO-AZO and OXY-AZO dyes	resorcin brown bas'ic dyes	Dyes which require acid mordants, being the salts of organic bases of artificial origin	magenta rosolan naphthylamin violet diamin fast yellow coal'-tar' dyes	Include 2,000 colors, coal-tar being the great source of modern dyes. Dyes not existing independently, but produced on the fiber itself	Bavarian blue di-ae'ti-on dyes	Include colors used chiefly as direct cotton dyes	diphenyl blue di-phe'nyl-am'in dyes	Coal-tar dyes, sometimes made by heating anilin with anilin hydrochlorid	rose bengale
di-rect' cot'ton dyes	Dye cotton without mordants; form lakes with basic colors; chiefly tetrazo compounds	indigo blue
e'o-sin dyes	Phthalein derivatives, including some wool, silk, and cotton dyes; salts of fluorescin	indophenol
in'di-go dyes	Include dyes made from the plant, and from sodium salt of indigotin-disulfonic acid synthetically obtained	Coupler's blue
in'do-phe'nol dyes	Nitrogen derivatives of quinone, giving blue shades
in'du-lin dyes	Artificial blue and violet dyes; complex derivatives of quinone lake pig'ments	Same as mineral pigments.
mad'der dyes	Formerly, alizarin dyes from madder root; now made from anthracene	alizarin maroon Meldola's blue chrome green
Mal'do-la's dye'stuffs	Synthetic oxazin dyestuffs, coloring cotton blue or violet
min'er-al pig'ments	Colors fixed upon the fiber by means of some adhesion	chrome yellow mor'dant dyes	Dyes which, when mixed with metallic oxids, color textile fibers; including alizarins, azo compounds, derivatives of pyrogallol, and nitroso compounds	toluylene red neu'tral dyes	Include all dyes whose original affinities are neutral or become so by combining with a suitable acid or basic complement	crocein orange artificial alizarin
ox'y-az'o dyes	A division of azo dyes; chiefly sodium salts of sulfonic acids of oxy-azo compounds	phenol black peate dyes	Dyes ready for use in the form of a semi-liquid mass	rose bengale
phe'nol dyes	Dyes from phenol, which is obtained from coal-tar oils; chiefly acid dyes for wool phtha'e-in dyes	Triphenyl-carbinol derivatives; their alkali salts are fluorescent in solution	resolic acid anilin rose quin'o-lin dyes	Coloring matters made from quinolin; one of a homologous series of bases derived from coal-tar naphthas
quin'one dyes	Synthetic dyes derived from quinone; used chiefly on cotton	magenta
ros-an'i-lin dyes	Dyes derived from triamido diphenyl tolyl carbinol
ro-sol'ic ac'id dyes	Triphenyl-carbinol derivatives, made by condensation of various phenols, with color
saf'ranin dyes	Mixtures of phenyl and tolyl safranins, giving red shades
tri-phe'nyl-car'bi-nol dyes	Anilin dyes, derived from triphenyl-carbinol, including rosanilin, rosolic acid, and phthalein dyes
tri-phe'nyl-meth'ane dyes	Coal-tar derivatives, used on silk and wool	magenta indigo
vat dyes	Dyes prepared by the vat-process ing dyes (those formed on the fiber; see INGRAIN COLOR), lakes and pigments (insoluble coloring-matters which are fixed on the fiber); (2) according to the coal-tar compounds which they resemble or from which they are derived, and from the organic groups which they contain. See COLOR, n., 19.

For specific dyes, as Alexandria blue, alizarin brown, etc., see tables under the respective colors, as BLUE, BROWN, etc.

dye-ŝ, n. Dic; hazard.

dye'-house", 1 dai'-hous'; 2 dȳ'-hous', n. A building in which dyeing is carried on.

dye'-house"ŝ, n. [Prov. Eng.] A house where milk is kept. See DAIRY. dye'-houseer dye'ing, 1 dai'iŋ; 2 dȳ'iŋ, n. The act, process, or trade of fixing colors in cloth or other porous material.

True dyeing can only result when the colouring matter is presented to the fibre in a soluble condition, and is then, by some means or other, rendered insoluble while it is absorbed by, or is in direct contact with, the fibre. There must always be some marked physical or chemical affinity existing between fibre and colouring matter, and this depends upon the physical and chemical properties of both. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. viii, p. 745.

dye'pline", n. Same as KING-DEVIL.

dye'r, 1 dai'or; 2 dȳ'er, n. One who dyes; especially, one engaged in the business of dyeing fabrics. dy'ere†.

— dy'er's-broom", n. A shrubby plant (Genista tinctoria) yielding a yellow dye which with wood becomes a permanent green. dy'er's-green'weed"†; dye'weed"‡.

dyer's-moss, n. Same as ARCHIL, — dyer's-weed, n. 1. The European woad or weld (Reseda luteola), used for dyeing green, yellow, or blue, according to the mordant employed, especially in coloring wall-paper. 2. Woad or dyer's-woad (Isatis tinctoria).

Dy'er, n. 1. John (1700–1758), an English clergyman and poet, born in Wales: Ruins of Rome, etc. 2. A county in N. W. Tennessee; 600 sq. m.; county-seat, Dyersburg. 3. A town in Gibson county, Tenn.

Dy'ers-burg, 1 dai'orz-bürg; 2 dȳ'ers-bürg, n. A city, county-seat of Dyer county, Tenn.

Dy'ers-ville, 1 dai'orz-vil; 2 dȳ'ers-vil, n. A town in Dubuque county, Ia.

dy'go-gram, 1 dai'go-gram; 2 dȳ'go-grăm, n. A diagram showing how the horizontal component of the force of magnetism on a ship's compass-needle varies while the vessel is making a circuit or curve. [< Gr. dynamis (see DYNAMITE) + gōnia, angle, + gramma, a writing.]

dy'go-graph, 1 dai'go-graf; 2 dȳ'go-grăf, n. An apparatus used for correcting ships' compasses.

dy'ing, 1 dai'iŋ; 2 dȳ'iŋ, pa. 1. Departing from the present life; ceasing to live; near to death; expiring; hence, gradually fading; beginning to close; as, a dying man; the dying day. 2. Destined to death; mortal; perishable; as, dying bodies. 3. Of or pertaining to death; also, given, uttered, or manifested just before death; as, a dying prayer; a dying declaration. 4. [Colloq.] Extremely eager or solicitous. — dy'ing-ly, adv. — dy'ing-ness, n. The state of dying, or the affectation of a dying state; languishment.

dyke, n. Same as DIKE.

dyk'hop"per, 1 daik'hep'or; 2 dȳk'hŏp'er, n. [Local, Scot.] A bird, the wheatear.

dyk'er, 1 dai'kor; 2 dȳ'ker, n. Eccl. A two-branched candlestick; dicerion. [< Gr. dikerōs, two-horned.]

Dykes, 1 daiks; 2 dȳks, Rachus (1/11 1823–1/12 1876). An English clergyman; composed sacred music; Nearer, my God, to Thee, etc.

dy'kie, 1 dai'ki; 2 dȳ'ki, n. [Local, Eng.] The hedge-sparrow.

Dy'lan, 1 di'lan; 2 dū'lan, n. A Welsh-Breton Neptune, or sea-divinity.

Dy'mond, 1 dai'mond; 2 dȳ'mond, Jonathan (8/14 1796–5/8 1828). An English Quaker; moralist; Principles of Morality.

dy'na-, 1 dai'na-; 2 dȳ'na-. From Gr. dynamis, power: a combining form. In English words beginning with this prefix the sound of i in ain prevailed to the middle of the 19th century. This, while etymologically correct, and still occasionally heard, is now practically rejected in favor of the a sound as in dynamite.

dy-nac"ti-nom'e-ter, 1 dai-nak'ti-nam'i-tər; 2 dȳ-năk'ti-nŏm'e-ter, n. An apparatus for actinic power, or for comparing the quickness of action of lenses in photography. [< Gr. dynamis (see DYNAMITE) + aktis (aktin-), ray, + metron, measure.]

dy'na-graf, 1 dai'na-graf; 2 dȳ'na-grăf, n. Same as DYNAMOGRAPH.

dy'nam, 1 dai'nam; 2 dȳ'năm, n. 1. The work required to raise one pound through one foot; a foot-pound: used as a unit. 2. The resultant of all the forces acting on a body: either a force or a force and a couple. [< Gr. dynamis; see DYNAMITE.] dy'name†.

dy-nam'e-ter, 1 dai-nam'i-tər; 2 dȳ-năm'e-ter, n. A device for measuring the magnifying power of telescopes. [Shortened from DYNAMOMETER.] — dy"na-met'ric, dy"na-met'ri-cal, a.

dy-nam'i-, 1 di-nam'i-; 2 dy-năm'i-. From Gr. dynamis, power: a combining form.

dy-nam'ic, 1 dai-nam'ik, -i-kal; 2 dȳ-năm'ic, -i-cal, dy-nam'i-cal, } a. 1. Phys. Sci., Of or pertaining to forces not in equilibrium; pertaining to motion as the result of force: opposed to static.

Strictly speaking, all questions of electricity is static, and all electricity in motion, from whatever source, is dynamic.

B. SILLIMAN, JR. Physics ¶ 809, p. 532. [n. s. & co.]

2. Pertaining to or characterized by mechanical force.

Modern physical investigation has entirely set aside the idea, still lingering among metaphysicians, that extension is the only essential quality of matter; dynamical energy is also essential. McCOSH Divine Government bk. ii. p. 77, note. [c. a BRIDGE, 1866.]

3. Producing or involving activity or action of any kind; motive; efficient: applied sometimes to mental, moral, and spiritual conditions.

If [the Greek intellect] has been the great dynamic agency in European civilisation.

LECKY Eng. in the Eighteenth Cent. vol. i, p. 16. [a. 1888.]

4. Econ. Relating to the equilibrial changes of economic forces, due either to unusual conditions or to a gradual varying of a people's habits and ideals. 5. Phon. Enunciated with force or stress, as a syllable. 6. Med. Functional, as opposed to organic; as, a dynamic disease. [< Gr. dynamikos, powerful, < dynamat, be able.] — dynamic cooling (Physics), the cooling of a gas by expansion. — d. electricity (Elec.), electricity with a low potential but of considerable quantity: distinguished from static electricity. — d. heating (Physics), the heating of a gas by compression. — d. metamorphism (Geol.), see under METAMORPHISM. — d. murmurs (Med.), cardiac murmurs caused by an unusual shape of the heart's internal surface. — d. relations, relations of cause and effect. — d. stability (Ship-building), a measure of the work done in overcoming forces in keeling a ship to a given angle from the upright position of equilibrium, assuming that the medium in which the ship floats does not resist rolling. — d. theory, one of the various theories of dynamism. — d. theory of heat, see HEAT. — dy-nam'i-cal-ly, adv. 1. In accordance with the principles of dynamics. 2. With force or power; energetically.

dy-nam'ic, n. 1. Dynamics. 2. The moving force or motive for any action.

dy"na-mi-cle'ful, 1 dai'nam-i-ti; 2 dȳ'năm-i-ti, n. Chem. Same as ATOMICITY.

dy-nam'ics, 1 dai-nam'iks; 2 dȳ-năm'ics, n. 1. Physics. (1) The branch of mechanics that treats of the effects of forces in producing motion, and of the laws of the motion thus produced: sometimes called kinetics: opposed to statics. (2) The science that treats of the laws of force, whether producing equilibrium or motion: in this sense including both statics and kinetics. 2. The forces producing or governing activity or movement of any kind; also, the methods of such activity; as, spiritual dynamics: collective term.

Philanthropy is the dynamics of Christianity; that is to say, it is Christianity in action. R. T. ELY Social Aspects of Christianity essay iii, p. 85. [e. v. c.]

3. Mus. The department of musical science that treats of the powers and qualities of tones, as piano, mezzo, forte, clear, somber, dolce. — chemical dynamics (Phys. Chem.), the study of chemical changes as manifested by their energetics. — vital d. (Med.), the effects of remedial agents on the human organism not ascribable to either mechanical or chemical causes.

dy"nam-i'es-ter, 1 dai-nam'i-ster; 2 dȳ'na-mim'e-ter, n. Same as DYNAMOMETER. dy"na-mi-om'e-ter‡.

dy'na-mis, 1 dai'na-mis; 2 dȳ'na-mis, n. [Gr.] Aristotelianism. The undeveloped capacity for a further future realization; potentiality: opposed to energeia.

dy'na-mism, 1 dai'na-mizm; 2 dȳ'na-mism, n. 1. Philos. One of various doctrines that endeavor to explain the phenomena of the universe chiefly or wholly in terms of force or energy. Since the early doctrine of the Ionic philosophers, which referred the origin of motion to the principles of the material basis, each of the more important forms of dynamism have been the following: (1) Leibnitz's doctrine that we must conceive of material substance as a combination of simple and ultimate forces; (2) the theory proposed by Kant and adopted by many modern physicists that matter consists of forces of attraction and repulsion; (3) the complete identification of the category of substance with energy (energetics); or, more especially, (4) Spencerian evolution.

2. The mode of existence of force or energy. [< Gr. dynamis (see DYNAMITE) + -ISM.] — dy'na-mist, n. One who believes in dynamism. — dy"na-mis'tic, a.

dy'na-mi-tard, 1 dai'na-mi-tūrd; 2 dȳ'na-mi-tärd, n. Same as a DYNAMITER.

dy'na-mite, 1 dai'na-mait; 2 dȳ'na-mit (XIII), vt. [-MIT"ED; -MIT'ING.] 1. To disintegrate with or as with dynamite. 2. To charge with dynamite, as a mine.

dy'na-mite, n. An explosive composed of nitroglycerin held in an absorbent called the dope, invented in 1866 by Alfred Nobel. Formerly silicious earth or similar inert dope was used. This has been largely replaced by nitrate mixtures, which serve to reduce explosive force. The quantity of nitroglycerin in dynamite varies from 75 to 25 per cent., but is usually about 40 per cent. See EXPLOSIVE. [< Gr. dynamis, power, < dynamai, be able.] — dy'na-mite-gun", n. An air-gun for projecting a shell filled with very high explosive. — d. shell, n. A missile charged with dynamite or other explosives after being fired from a gun.

Dynamite-gun.

— gelatin d., a powerful explosive made by dissolving explosive gelatin with an inexpensive absorbent, such as wood-pulp. — dy'na-mit"ism, n. The theory and practise of employing dynamite to destroy life and property, in the interest of political or other schemes.

b, breech; p, projectile ready for loading; Ls, tube; Ls, trunnion; Ls, truss.

dy'na-mit"er, 1 dai'na-mait'or; 2 dȳ'na-mit'er, n. One who uses or advocates the use of dynamite, especially for political or revolutionary purposes. dy'na-mit'ist‡.

dy'na-mit'ic, 1 dai'na-mit'ik; 2 dȳ'na-mit'ic, a. Powerfully explosive; suggestive of or pertaining to dynamite. — dy'na-mit'i-cal-ly, adv. — dy'na-mit'i-cal-ly‡, adv.

dy'na-mit"ing, 1 dai'na-mait'iŋ; 2 dȳ'na-mit'ing, n. The use of dynamite; specifically, its use for the destruction of life and property by lost persons.

dy'na-mi-za'tion, 1 dai'na-mi-zē'shon; 2 dȳ'na-mi-zā'shon, n. 1. Augmentation of force or activity; dynamogeny. 2. In homeopathy, the trituration or succession of medicines to increase their dynamic power.

dy'na-mize, 1 dai'na-maiz; 2 dȳ'na-miz, vt. [-MIZED; -MIZ'ING.] In homeopathy, to increase the power of (medicines) by trituration or succession. [< Gr. dynamis; see DYNAMITE.]

dy'na-mo, 1 dai'na-mō; 2 dȳ'na-mō, n. Elec. A machine, driven by steam or operated by some other force or power, which, through the agency of electromagnetic induction, converts into electrical energy in the form of currents of high potential the mechanical energy put into it, with losses due to heating, friction, etc.; a dynamo-electric generator. In general, a dynamo consists of two main elements, the magnetic field and the conductor, to which the means for collecting the current generated by the mechanical variation of their mutual relations. A soft iron core wound with coils of insulated wire, called the armature, and representing the conductor, is rapidly rotated by mechanical means between the poles of electromagnets, called field-magnets and representing the magnetic field, in such a way as to cut magnetic lines of force and develop electromotive force, which shows itself as a potential difference between two brushes or springs which press upon the insulated rings forming the terminals of the armature coils and revolving with the armature. If the two ends of a conductor are attached respectively to these two springs, the potential difference will cause a current to flow through the wire. See INDUCTION. Dynamos are of two kinds: (1) alternating dynamos, and (2) direct-current dynamos. The foregoing description applies broadly to both classes, save that in the former the current, as taken off by the springs from the collector-rings, alternates as often as the armature coils approach and recede from the poles of the field-magnets, while in the latter, through the use of a commutator, the potential differences and consequent direction of the current are mechanically maintained in the same sense or direction. Alternating dynamos are usually divided into three classes: (1) those with stationary field-magnets and revolving armature, (2) those with rotating field-magnets and stationary armature, and (3) those with both field-magnet and armature stationary, the variation in their relations being produced by the revolution between them of masses of laminated iron, as in the inductor dynamo. A dynamo is termed self-exciting when the current it develops is used to energize its field-magnet, and separately exciting when its field-magnet is energized from an outside source. See GENERATOR, 6, and ELECTRIC MOTOR under MOTOR.

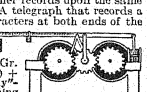
Alternating Dynamo of 4,000 Horse-power as used in hydroelectric plant on Weber river, Utah.

Dynamos are named (1) from the character or winding of their armatures; as, closed-coil dynamo, disk d., drum d., open-coil d., pole-changing d., and ring d.; (2) from the manner in which the field-magnets are arranged or excited; as, compound-wound d., homopolar or unipolar d., separate-circuit d., series-wound d., shunt-wound d., shunt-wound d., single-coil d., multipolar d.; (3) from the character of the current produced; as, continuous-current d., multiphase d.; and (4) from the service required of them; as, electroplating d., arclighting d.

Such was the insight of Faraday into the fundamental nature of the dynamo that the principle of its action laid down by him remained essentially unchanged. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. viii, p. 784.

— motor dynamo. n. A dynamo used as a motor. 2. A dynamo driving a dynamo-electric motor. — mouse-mill d., a dynamo whose armature consists of parallel copper bars arranged on a hollow cylinder.

dy"na-mo-cos'mi-cal, 1 dai'na-mo-koz'mi-kəl; 2 dȳ"na-mo-cŏz'mi-cal, a. Meteorol. Relating to those terms in the analysis of any meteorological element which are conceived as being dependent upon extra-terrestrial forces.



dy'na-mo-e-lec'tric, 1 dai'na-mo-i-lek'trik; 2 dȳ'na-mo-e-lĕc'tric, a. Pertaining to the relation between electricity and mechanical force or their reciprocal action; transforming mechanical into electrical energy, or the reverse. [< Gr. dynamis (see DYNAMITE) + ELECTRIC.] dy'na-mo-e-lec'tri-cal†. — dynamo-electric machine, either a dynamo-electric generator, usually known simply as a dynamo, which utilizes mechanical power and produces electric current, or a dynamo-electric motor, usually called a motor, which utilizes electric current and produces mechanical power. Either machine may be used to perform the functions of the other.

The dynamo-electric machine gave an extraordinary impetus to the investigation of all branches of electric science. F. L. POPE in Electricity in Daily Life, Electric Motor p. 45. [a. 1891.]

dy"na-mo-gen'e-sis, 1 dai'na-mo-jen'i-sis; 2 dȳ'na-mo-jĕn'e-sis, n. The fact or process of the formation of sense in general, but especially when they are sudden and strong, affect the tension and movements of the muscular. The principle seems to follow from the law of neural dynamogeny, that energy of stimulation tends to be transformed into energy of bodily movement. The term is also sometimes extended to the effect of sensorial stimulation on the activities of thought.

dy"na-mog'e-ny, 1 dai'na-moj'i-ni; 2 dȳ'na-mŏg'e-ny, n. 1. Psychol. Production of increased nervous activity; the reinforcing effect of sensorial stimuli upon muscular action. 2. The action of a tonic medicine. [< dynamis (see DYNAMITE) + -GENY.] — dy"na-mo-gen'ic, a. dy"na-mo-ge-ne'tic†. — dy"na-mog'e-nous, a.

dy'nam-o-graph, 1 dai-nam'o-graf; 2 dȳ-năm'o-grăf, n. 1. A recording instrument particularly an instrument for continuously and automatically recording the amount of adhesion to the rails of a railway car, the condition of the track, the speed of the train, and the power consumed in hauling, etc., besides making or permitting the making of other records upon the same sheet or web of paper. 2. A telegraph that records a message in typewritten characters at both ends of the line. 3. A device to record the degree of compression of an elliptic spring; a grip-tester. [< Gr. dynamis (see DYNAMITE) + -GRAPH.] dy'nam-o-graf†. — dy"na-mo-graph'ic, a. Pertaining to the registering of strength or movements.

dy"na-mol'o-gy, 1 dai'na-mol'o-ji; 2 dȳ'na-mŏl'o-gy, n. The science of forces; dynamics.

dy"na-mo-met'a-mor'phism, n. 1. Physics. Transformation of energy. 2. See METAMORPHISM.

dy"na-mom'e-ter, 1 dai'na-mom'i-tər; 2 dȳ'na-mŏm'e-ter, n. 1. An instrument for measuring force exerted or power expended, as by an animal or a machine, in doing work. 2. Same as DYNAMETER. [< Gr. dynamis (see DYNAMITE) + -METER.]

When the large wheels are driven by belts, motion is communicated to the center spur-wheel, which is hung from the graduated balance-lever in such a manner that the strain may be measured in pounds.

— absorption dynamometer, any form of dynamometer absorbing the measured energy by frictional resistances; distinguished from transmission dynamometer, which transmits the power measured to perform useful work in other machines.— dynamometer of power, a name sometimes given to a dynamometer or dynamometry. dy″na-mo-met′ri-cal; — dy″na-mom′e-try, n. The act or art of measuring the expenditure of power.

dy-nam′o-phone, n. [dī-nam′o-fōn; 2 dȳ-năm′o-fōn, n. A form of transmission dynamometer fitted with two telephone circuits and used to measure the twist of a turning shaft.

dy-nam′o-scope, n. [dī-nam′o-skōp; 2 dȳ-năm′o-skōp, n. A device for detecting the slight murmurs in the fibrillary contraction of a muscle.— dy″na-mos′co-py, n. The auscultation of muscles by means of the dynamoscope.

dy″na-mo-stat′ic, [dī″na-mo-stat′ik; 2 dȳ″na-mo-stăt′ic, a. pertaining to the so-called dynamostatic machine designed by Prof. Elihu Thomson for obtaining static electricity from an alternating current.

dy′na-mo″tor, [dī′na-mō″tor or -tor; 2 dȳ″na-mō″tor, n. Elec. 1. A kind of rotary transformer. 2. A dynamo-electric machine having one field-magnet, one armature-core, and two armature-windings, each having a commutator, and being insulated from the other. [< DYNAMO + MOTOR.]

dy′nast, [dī′nast; 2 dȳ′năst, n. 1. One who holds chief power, especially as hereditary ruler; a monarch; sovereign.

No dynast, perhaps, of the ancient families was ever so little protected by royalty, or ever cared so little about a throne [as Dom Pedro II.]. The Spectator [London] Dec. 12, 1891, p. 831.

Dy-nas′ti-dæ, [dī-nas′ti-dē; 2 dȳ-năs′ti-dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of lamellicorn beetles now united with Scarabæidæ, including the Hercules-beetle, Dynastes Hercules. (Gr. dynastēs, lord, + -IDÆ.) — dy-nas′ti-dan, a. & n.

Dy″nas-ti′næ, n. pl. Entom. A subfamily of Scarabæidæ embracing some of the largest forms.— Dy-nas′ti-dēs, n. pl. Same as DYNASTINÆ.

dy′nas-ty, [dī′nos-ti; 2 dī′năs-ti; 2 dȳ′năs-ty or dȳn′as-ty (XIII), n. [PTES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tis, pl.] 1. A succession of sovereigns or rulers in one line of family descent, or considered from the same ancestral stock, governing the same country; as, the Bourbon dynasty. 2†. Supreme rule; government. [< F. dynastie, < LL. dynastia, < Gr. dynasteia, < dynastēs, lord, < dynamai, to be able.] dy″nas-tic, a. Of or pertaining to a dynasty. dy-nas′ti-cal-ly, adv.— dy-nas′ti-cal-ly, adv.— dy-nas′ti-cism, n. Government by a dynasty; sovereignty handed down in one family line.

dyne, [dīn; 2 dȳn, n. The fundamental unit of force in the C. G. S. system; the force which, applied to a mass of one gram for one second, would give it a velocity of one centimeter a second. It is about the weight of 1-981 milligrams, or practically one two-hundredth of a grain. [Abbr. of DYNAM.] — dyne′-cen′ti-me″ter, n. 1. The work done by one dyne acting through one centimeter; the C. G. S. unit of work. 2. The moment of one dyne acting at the length of an arm of one centimeter; the C. G. S. unit for moment of force.

dy″o-ce′tri-a-con″ta-he′dron, n. Geom. A solid bounded by 32 faces. [< Gr. dyo kai triakonta, thirty-two, + hedra, base.] dy″o-ce″tri-a-hed′ral, a.

dy′o-phone, [dī′o-fōn; 2 dȳ′o-fōn, n. Acoustics. An instrument emitting simultaneously two tones of the same pitch, but differing in timbre. [< Gr. dyo, two, + phōnē, sound.]

dy-oph′y-sīt″ism, [dī-of′i-sait″izm; 2 dȳ-ŏf′y-sīt″ism, n. The theory that there are two natures, the divine and the human, united in the person of Jesus Christ; opposed to monophysitism. dy-oph′y-sīt″ic, [-sait″ik; 2 -sīt″ic, a. Pertaining to dyophysitism, grow.] — dy-oph′y-sīt″e, n. — dy-oph′y-sīt″ic, dy-oph′y-sīt′i-cal, a.

Dy″o-pru′ni-da, [dī″o-prū′ni-da; 2 dȳ″o-pru′ni-da, n. pl. Prot. A division of Gymnodican radiolarians with the shell bilocular. [< Gr. dyo, two, + L. prunum, plum.] — dy″o-pru′nid-dan, a.

dy″o-the′ism, [dī″o-thī′izm; 2 dȳ″o-thē″ism, n. The theory of two Gods in the universe; theistic dualism. [< Gr. dyo, two, + theos, god.]

dy-oth′e-lism, [dī-oth′i-lizm; 2 dȳ-ŏth′ē-lism, n. Eccl. Hist. The doctrine that in Jesus Christ two wills are maintained, sometimes, but not constantly, one divine, the other human. [< Gr. dyo, two, + thelō, wish.] dy-oth′e-let-ism†; — dy-oth′e-let′i-cal, a.— dy-oth′e-lite. 1. a. Pertaining to dyotheism. 2. n. One who contends for the doctrine of dyotheism. [DURAZZO.

Dyr-na′chi-um, [dī-nā′ki-um; 2 dȳr-na′ci-ŭm, n. Same as dys-, 1 dis-; 2 dȳs-, prefix. An inseparable prefix giving or augmenting a bad meaning. [< L. dys-, < Gr. dys-, hard, bad.] — dys″a-cu′sis, n. Pathol. Hardness of hearing; partial deafness; an aural derangement that renders common sounds distressing. dys-a-cu′sic [-sik; 2 -sic, a. dys-a-cou′stic; dys-a-cou′sis; dys-a-cous′ma†.— dys-al′bu-mose, n. Med. An albuminoid substance resulting from the splitting up of proteids during the process of digestion; a product of the peptic digestion of fibrin.— dys-an′a-lyte, n. Mineral. A black ferrous calcium columbotitanate, (FeCaCeNa)$_2$(Cb, Ti)$_2$O$_6$, crystallizing in the isometric system.— dys′a-phe, n. Pathol. Derangement or morbid condition of the sense of touch. dys-aph′a-i; dys-haph′i-a; — dys″a-o-not′o-sy, n. Obstet. Difficult parturition.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

Dy′sart, [dī′sart; 2 dȳ′sart, n. A seaport town in Fifeshire, Scotland.

dys-ar′thri-a, n. Pathol. Difficulty of articulation; dysalia. — dys-ar′thric, a.— dys″ar-thrit′is, n. Pathol. An anomalous form of gout. — dys″ar-thro′sis, n. Pathol. 1. Congenital malformation of a joint. 2. Dislocation. 3. A false joint.— dys-bou′li-a, n. Pathol. A considerable impairment of the power of willing or self-control.— dys″es-tap′o-sis, n. Pathol. Great difficulty in swallowing, especially water, in cases of hydrophobia.— dys-che′zi-a, n. Pathol. Difficult or painful evacuation of the bowels.— dys-chro′a, n. A morbid discoloration of the skin, as in jaundice. — dys-chrol′a‡; dys″chro-ma′si-a†.— dys-chro″ma-top′si-a, n. Pathol. Difficulty in distinguishing colors; partial color-blindness. dys-chro″ma-top′sis‡; dys-chro″ma-top-sy†.— dys-chro′mi-a, n. Pathol. Pathological discoloration of the skin.

dys′chro-nous, [dis′kro-nus; 2 dȳs′cro-nŭs, a. Occurring at different times: opposed to synchronous.

dys′cl-ne-si′a, [dis″i-nē′si-a; 2 dȳs″i-nē′sī-a, n. Pathol. Impairment of the power of movement; inability to move without pain. dys″el-ne′sis‡; dys″li-ne′si-a†.

Dys-coph′i-dæ, [dis-kof′i-dē; 2 dȳs-cŏf′i-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of frogs like amphibians with upper teeth and dilated sacral diapophyses. Dys-co′phus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. dys-, kōphos, stone-deaf, < dyō-, hard, + kōphos, deaf, < koptō, smite.] — dys′co-phid, n. — dys′co-phoid, a. & n.

dys-ocu′ri-a, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the pupil of the eye. — dys-cras′i, v. To affect with dyscrasia.— dys-cra′si-a, n. Pathol. A depraved condition of the system, and especially of the blood, due to constitutional disease; general bad health. dys′crase‡; dys′cra-sy‡. — dys-cra′si-al, dys-cra′sic, a.

dys′crite, [dis′krā-sait; 2 dȳs′cra-sīt, n. Mineral. A silver-white, opaque silver antimonid (Ag_3Sb) found massive and in orthorhombic crystals. [< DYS- + Gr. krasis, mixture, < keramnymi, mix.]

Dys-der′i-dæ, [dis-der′i-dē; 2 dȳs-dĕr′i-dē, n. pl. Arach. A family of tubitelarian spiders with two pairs of stigmata near the base of the abdomen. Dys′de-ra, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. dysdēris, hard to battle with, < dys-, hard, + ēris, contest.] Dys″de-rol′dæ, [-de-rol′dē; dys′de-rid, a. & n.— dys′de-roid, a.

dys-er′u-la, [dis-er′ū-a; 2 dȳs-ĕr′ū-la, n. Pathol. A morbid or vitiated condition of the blood. [< DYS- + Gr. haima, blood.] dys-æ′mi-a†.

dys′en-ter-y, [dis′en-ter-i; 2 dȳs′ĕn-tĕr-y, n. Pathol. A severe inflammation of the mucous membrane of the large intestine, attended with bloody evacuations, griping pains, and some fever; bloody flux: applied also to a disastrous disease affecting bees in the spring; a diarrhœa. Dysentery is either acute or chronic, and may also be sporadic or epidemic. diphtheritic dysentery is noted by the appearance of a false membrane; Japanese or bacillary it is produced by an intestinal bacillus; and tropical or amœbic it is due to intestinal amœbæ. [< F. dysenterie, < L. dysenteria, < Gr. dysenteriē, < dys-, bad, + enteron, see ENTRAILS.] — dys″en-ter′ic, a. — dys″en-ter′i-cal, a. — dys′en-ter-ize, v. d.-weed‡.— rheumatic d., inflammation of the bowels accompanied by a rheumatic inflammation of the joints and catarrhal effusion of the mucous membrane of the intestines. simple d., 1. Pertaining to dysentery. 2. Suffering from dysentery. dys″en-ter′i-cal‡; dys″en-ter′i-zoat.

dys′es-the′sis, [dis-es-thē′sis, n. Pathol. Loss of sensation, partial or complete; numbness. dys″æs-the′si-a‡; dys″es-the′sist; dys″es-the′sia; dys″es-thet′ic, a. Relating to or affected by dysesthesia. dys″es-thet′i-cal, a.— dys″es-thet′o-sis, *n. E

Ɛ ɛ — Black Letter.
E e — Script.

E, e, 1 ī; 2 ē, n. [ES, E's, or Es, 1 īz; 2 ēs, pl.] 1. A letter: the fifth and the most frequently used in the English alphabet.

Its modern English name is the first syllable of even, but it rarely has that sound in monosyllables, except when doubled, as in eel, or followed by 'silent e' after an intervening consonant, as in read. In the other languages which use the Roman alphabet its name rimes with may, this being its original 'long' sound. Its odd English name is due to the fact that the original long e gradually came to be pronounced ī (as in police) and took the name of that letter, while the original long a (as in far) was 'raised' to the a of fate and took its name. Key 1 of this dictionary uses the letter 'e' in its original values.

Described with respect to the position of the tongue in pronouncing them, the proper e sounds are higher than the a of bat and lower than the ĭ of bit. The short sound is very common in such words as met, bless. The exact 'long' of this sound is rare in English, but may be heard in their, as pronounced by those who distinguish it from there. It is often half long before a voiced consonant, as in bend. The 'long e' of they, fate, is not only longer but higher than the e of met; and, since many speakers 'raise' it in the act of utterance, it often takes on the diphthongal character of 'e' and 'ĭ.'

Like the other vowels, e tends to lose its distinctive character when not protected from change by the stress, becoming ə, as in over, moment, or ĭ, as in believe, renew.

An unfortunate peculiarity of English is its very frequent use of 'silent e,' to denote the 'length' or quality of a preceding vowel; ep, fat and fate, sit and site, cut and cute. This usage does not go back to Anglo-Saxon times, but took root in Middle English under French influence.

Summing up, the letter 'e' is now used for the following sounds:

(1) open short 'e' as in met; half-long in bend.
(2) close long 'e' (with the help of 'ĭ' or 'y'), as in well, they; somewhat more open in their.
(3) high close 'ĭ,' as in he, equal, and (with the help of silent 'e') in mete.
(4) ə in over, moment; very weak in sudden, battle.
(5) ĭ in report.

Finally, it enters into numerous digraphs, which for the most part now denote simple sounds; as in beat, beet, either, believe, people, feud, chew.

The history of the characters is represented as follows:

Hieroglyphic Fretwork. Egyptian Hieratic. Phenician. Early Greek. Roman. English.

Capital E is from Latin E, < Gr. Ε, < Ǝ, < Phenician 𐤄, < hieratic 𓀀, < Egyptian hieroglyph 𓀀. For lower-case, black letter (Old-English and German text), and for dates, see A. The Phenician character was the sign of a breathing, and called He, a window. The Greeks used it as a vowel sign and called it "epsilon," simple 'e,' in distinction from the digraph 'ei' (al). The later Greeks had a sign for 'ē' (see H).

2. An abbreviation: (1) [E] Elohist Prophetic Document, or the author of it: 19, 20, etc., indicating the different strata, E1 being the oldest. (2) The: a notehand breve. 3. A symbol noting: (1) The fifth in a class, order, group, or series; five as a number or numeral; also [E], in medieval Roman writing, the numeral 250. (2) Mus. (a) One of a series of tones, at intervals of an octave, given in modern international or French pitch, by 652 vibrations a second, or by 652 multiplied or divided by any power of 2; the third tone in the natural scale (C) and the fifth in the relative minor (A minor). See SCALE; PITCH. (b) A key having E for a key-note. See KEY. (c) On a keyed instrument, any key giving E. See KEYBOARD. (d) In written music, any note representing such a tone. See STAFF; KEY. (3) Ch. Calendar. The fifth Dominical letter. See DOMINICAL. (4) Logic. [E] A universal negative proposition. (5) Math. (a) [E] In algebra, the operation of enlargement, or [e or E] a known quantity. (b) [e] The base of the Napierian system of logarithms. (c) The eccentricity of a conic. (6) Mech. (a) [E or e] The modulus of elasticity. (b) [e] The coefficient of restitution of elasticity. (c) The strain per linear unit. (7) Naut. [e] A Lloyds rating designating "second class." (8) Elec. [E or e] Electromotive force. (9) Astron. [E] An important Fraunhofer line in the spectroscope produced by iron. (10) Experimenter: used in experimental psychology. (11) Chem. [E] The element erbium (little used: Er the usual form). (12) In the international code of signals for ships, the letter denoted by a red, white, and blue triangular pennant. (13) An arbitrary designation for explanatory purposes applied to persons: often in legal use; as A, B, C, and D sued E. (14) The fifth letter of the alphabet impressed upon a type-body or type-bar; also, the perforation in a paper-roll for machine-cast composition expressing this symbol. 4. An object-shaped like the capital E.— E flat (Eb), a tone which is half a step below E.— E flat major, a major scale or key indicated by three flats.— E flat minor, a minor scale or key indicated by six flats.— E major, a major scale or key indicated by four sharps.— E minor, a minor scale or key indicated by one sharp.— E plan (Arch.), a plan, as of a country house, the outline of which is similar to an E: supposed by some to have been originated in honor of Queen Elizabeth.

ear', n. 1. Anat. The organ of hearing. In man and other mammals it consists of an external ear or auricle for collecting sound, a middle ear or tympanum for transmitting them, and an internal ear or labyrinth for delivering them to the end-organs of the auditory nerve. In other animals it is subject to numerous modifications. The external ear includes the pinna, or auricle, and the auditory canal or external meatus, whose orifice is concealed by the tragus. The middle ear, lying between the external meatus and the internal ear, is a cavity which receives air from the pharynx through the Eustachian tube and is in relation with the external ear through the tympanic membrane and with the internal ear through the ossicles.

a, helix; b, tragus; c, antitragus; d, antihelix; e, lobe. Compare the tympanic membrane, the ossicles, and the labyrinth, which communicates with the cochlea containing the organ of Corti, associated with the appreciation of tone. These are connected with the brain by the auditory nerve. The membranous labyrinth is walled off from the tympanic membrane of the middle ear, the tympanic wall of the bony labyrinth has two apertures, the fenestra ovalis and the fenestra rotunda, both closed by a membrane, and to the former the base of the ossicle called the stapes is applied. The vibrating sound-waves successively thrown into the tympanum by the ossicles and so into the labyrinth. In the mammals, the pinna varies in size from a cartilaginous flap, nearly or quite rigid, as in man and the quadrumana, to an elongated funnel capable of movement in all directions, as in the horse. In vertebrates below mammals the pinna is usually absent, the ossicles and labyrinth are simple in structure, and even when the cochlea is as developed as it is in birds and crocodiles, the organ of Corti is lacking, and a single columella replaces the ossicles of mammals. In fishes, amphibians, and most reptiles, the outer ear is wanting. The cochlea is practically non-existent in fishes, but in many a chain of ossicles occurs, connecting the ear and the air-bladder. With the exception of the earless lancelet, semicircular canals are found in all the vertebrates, but it is not certain that these have auditory functions. Otoliths are present in the internal ear of vertebrates, and otocysts, supposedly auditory, exist in many invertebrates. In insects, chordotonal organs take the place of otocysts. See AUDITORY.

The human ear is . . . capable of appreciating sounds which arise from about twenty-four thousand vibrations in a second.
BREWSTER Natural Magic letter ix, p. 229. [N. M. 1838.]

2. The external ear alone; the pinna; auricle; concha. 3. earl¹, 1 l îrl; 2 ērl, n. 1. A member of the British noble, a hereditary nobleman above a viscount and next below a marquis: the title of one holding this rank. See illus. under CORONET.

Earl is the equivalent of the Norman count, which title superseded it in England as long as Norman French was spoken, and is still retained in the feminine form, countess. Under the Saxons earl designated one of the noble class, as opposed to ceorl, a simple freeman. In the 11th century earl became a title of office and was nearly synonymous with ealdorman, governor over a shire or county. After the conquest the title became hereditary, and until 1337, when the first duke was created, it was the highest title of nobility. The title is not now connected with territorial jurisdiction.

In the shereiff is called in Latin, vice-comes, as being the deputy of the earl or comes: to whom the custody of the shire is said to have been committed.

ear'nest2, n. 1. Something given as opposed to a feigned appearance; as, from jest to earnest. 2. [Archaic.] An utterance or matter marked by earnestness. 3†. Gravity. 4†. Enthusiasm in battle; intense feeling; passion. [< AS. eornest, seal.]' er'nest'.— in earnest, with grave or serious intent.

ear'nest3, n. 1. Part of something given or done in advance as a pledge; money or goods given to bind an agreement; specifically, in law, a part payment of part of the price by the buyer of a commodity as a guaranty that he will stand by the bargain. Under the early German law, earnest was similar to the deposit which frequently secures the modern option. Under the Roman civil law seller to refrain from parting with the property bargained for, and left the purchaser free to refuse to complete the sale, on forfeiting the amount of his earnest. The seller could be mulcted, he was liable in damages. The term was adopted into the common law of England and is found in the Statute of Frauds (29. Chs. II. Chap. 3), which declared void the sale of chattels of over a certain value unless there was delivery, or the buyer gave something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment. The payment of earnest is still required in some of the United States, but mention of it has been omitted from the New York Revised Statutes.

2. An indication or assurance of what may be expected in the future; foretaste; first fruits.

He gives, in His own resurrection, the earnest of that of His people. MACDUFF Mind of Jesus pt. ii, p. 105. [C. & BROS. 1864.]

earn'ful, a. Full of anxiety; fearful.

earn'ing, 1 ûrn'ing; 2 ērn'ing, n. 1. That which is ern'ing2, (earned; money or other compensation to which one has a claim for services rendered; wages; desert; reward: commonly used in the plural. 2. pl. Polit. Econ. The remainder of economic good for an economic service. SEE WAGES. [< AS. earnung, < earnian, earn.]— earnings or wages of management, returns for organizing or supervising labor or economic effort in any form.

earn'ings, n. [Dial., Eng.] Rennet.— earn'ing-grass'', n. [Dial., Eng.] Butterwort (Pinguicula vulgaris), so called because its leaves curdle milk.

ear'ring'', 1 îr'ring''; 2 ēr'ring'', n. 1. A ring or hook (usually of gold or silver) passed through the lobe of the ear, generally with a pendant of precious stones or other ornamentation; also, an ornamental gem or jewel fastened in the ear with a screw. 2. [Dial., Eng.] The common fuchsia. [< AS. eárhring, < éare, ear, + hring, ring.]

earsh, 1 ûrsh; 2 ērsh, n. [Dial., Eng.] Stubble; arrish. ersh†.

ear'spli''ting, etc. See under EAR1, n.

earth, 1 ûrth; 2 ērth, n. 1. To bury or hide in erth', the earth; cover, bank up, or choke with earth; also, to drive into the earth; as, to earth a store of nuts or a fox. 2. Hence, to bury or hide in anything.

Is the river[too bad hibernated, and we had followed its faint summer-trail to where it earthed itself in snow and ice.

THORBAU Excursions, Winter Walk p. 129. [N. & P. 1864.]

3. Elec. To place in electrical connection with the earth; as, to earth wires. 4. To purify by filtering through earth; as, earthed sugar.

II. i. 1. To go underground; burrow, as a mole. 2. To bank up flowers or vegetables with earth.

earth1, n. 1. The globe on which we dwell, the third in order of distance from the sun and the largest within the orbit of Jupiter: it is distinguished (1) in astronomy, from other heavenly bodies and (2) in theology, from the abode of departed spirits. The earth is an irregular spheroid, but is slightly compressed at the poles. Its motion round the sun in an elliptical path occupies 365¼ days, besides which it has a daily rotation from west to east, which occupies exactly 23 hours, 56 minutes, and 4.09 seconds, upon which depends the rising and setting of the sun. Were the axis of the earth perpendicular to the plane of the orbit, day and night would be of equal length during the year, but, in consequence of the angle of 23.5° — known as the obliquity of the ecliptic — which the axis makes with the orbit, we have the changes in seasons and climates. The average density of the earth is about 5.5, while its internal temperature appears to increase in the proportion of 1° for each 50 feet of descent.

2. The solid portion or surface of the globe, or any part of it, generally as distinguished from water and air; ground; as, where the earth ends the sea begins; this English earth is rich. Soil as distinguished from rock, especially, cultivable soil; hence, dirt; anything low or mean.

3. Those who inhabit the globe; the world at large.

No more hateful save the combat glorious
To which all earth and heaven may witness stand.

DINAH M. CRAIK Life Returning st. 5.

4. Temporal and transient interests and pursuits as contrasted with those that are spiritual and eternal; also, worldly matters. 5. The hole of a burrowing animal, as a fox. 7. Same as LAND1, n., 7 (2). 8. [Scot.] A turning of the earth; plowing. 9. Elec. (1) That part of the earth's ground including part of an electric circuit. (2) A fault in a telegraphic or telephonic line caused by accidental connection of the metallic conductor with the ground or earth; a ground. (3) A plate or other metallic body of large surface intended to secure a good connection between a wire conductor and the earth; a ground; a ground-plate. (4) A junction of an electric conductor with the ground, such that electricity may flow between them. 10. Any material used for soil, as clay and ocher. Many of the ochers are called earths and, according to the coloring-matter they contain, are known as black earth, blue earth, green earth, etc. 11. Chem. An earth-like metallic oxid; as, alumina, glucina, thorina, yttria, zirconia, etc. 12†. A locality upon the earth; country. [< AS. eorthe; perhaps allied to EAR3, e] erthe†. SYN.: see GLOBE.— Adamic earth, the ordinary soil. See ADAM.— alkaline earths, the oxids of calcium, strontium, barium, and sometimes magnesium.— bad e. (Elec.), an earth-connection of high resistance.— Bahama earth, barbados e., an earth of the Miocene period, chiefly formed from the remains of Radiolaria: found in the Barbados Islands.— black e., a black fertile soil, found in Europe and Asia, somewhat similar to the black soil of prairie-land. It differs from swamp-soil in being neutral.

The tchernayzem, or black earth of Russia.

ARCH. CIVIL ENGINEERING, Vol. xxxiii, p. 442. [MACM. 1885.]

— blue e., the formation in which amber occurs: so designated on the Baltic coast.— Cassel e., same as VANDYKE BROWN.— chalk e., a pulverulent chalk, used as a cosmetic.— dead e. (Elec.), an earth-connection offering slight resistance to a current; also, a fault in a telegraphic line caused by its being accidentally connected with the earth.— earth'-an''ger, n. An earth-borer.— e.-bag, n. Fort. A bag of earth used in repairing breastworks.— e.-ball, n. A species of truffle.— e.-bar, n. Elec. A metal bar attached to a switchboard which serves to ground the different circuits connected with it.— e.-bath, n. A bath of earth or mud: sometimes used as a remedy for disease.— e.-battery, n. A voltaic battery made of metal plates sunk in the earth, the moisture of which serves as an exciant.— e.-board, n. The mold-board of a plow.— e.-borer, n. An auger for boring into the ground, working in a cylindrical box to retain the cut earth until the tool is withdrawn.— e.-born, a. 1. Born out of the earth: of earthly origin, as the Titans and other mythological beings. 2. Of terrestrial birth, as distinguished from celestial origin; mortal. 3. Springing from earthly or temporal considerations; hence, mean or ignoble; as, earth-born ambitions.— e.-bound, a. Bound by the earth; hence, figuratively, controlled by earthly considerations.— e.-bred, a. Groveling; contemptible.— e.-cell, n. Same as EARTH-BATTERY.— e.-chestnut, n. Same as EARTHNUT.— e.-closet, n. A commode or privy in which dry earth is used as a deodorizer.— e. crab, n. The mole-cricket.— e.-created, a. Made of earth; produced by the earth.— e.-current, n. Elec. See CURRENT, 3.— e.-din†, n. An earthquake.— e.-dog, n. A dog adapted or trained to follow animals into their burrows or to dig in the earth.— e.-dragon, n. Same as EARTH-WORM.— e.-drain, n. A drain laid in the earth.— e.-drop, n. Elec. The difference of potential at any point between the return conductor of an electric system and the ground.— e.-eater, n. 1. One who or that which eats earth. 2. The ibigau.— e.-fall, n. A landslide.— e.-fast, a. Stuck firmly in the earth.— e.-fed, a. Fed and contented with earthly things; grovelling.— e. flax, n. Asbestos with soft long fibers.— e.-flea, n. The chigoe.— e.-fly†.— e.-foam, n. Same as APHRITE.— e.-fork, n. A fork-shaped implement with the prongs flattened out: used in digging.— e.-gall, n. 1. Any one of various bitter herbs of the genitian family, especially the century (Erythræa centaurium). 2. The American white hellebore or Indian poke (Veratrum viride).— e.-hog, n. The aardvark.— e.-hole†, n. A cave.— e.-house, n. One of the underground structures of unhewn stones found in Scotland and Ireland, perhaps originally places of refuge or storehouses for grain, etc. They are sometimes 60 feet long, gallery-shaped, curved, and often grouped, like the 40 or 50 near Clova in Aberdeenshire: ascribed to post-Roman times.— e.-indicator, n. Elec. A device for comparing the intensity of any magnetic field with that of the earth, by means of the current induced in a rotating coil of wire.— earth'-kin, n. Same as TERELLA.— e.-light, n. A light of greatly varying intensity, sometimes visible, illuminates the nocturnal sky, and is not attributable to sunlight, moonlight, or starlight. It is conjectured to be a feeble auroral discharge, but occurs in the absence of any well-defined aurora, and in all parts of the sky: sometimes called earth-shine.— e.-louse, n. Entom. Any one of several species of aphids that feed on roots, as Aphis radicum and Rhizobius lactuæ.— lettuce e.-louse, a destructive plant-louse (Rhizobius lactuæ) which attacks the roots of lettuce-plants.— e.-mad†, a. An earthworm.— e.-metal, n. A metallic element, as magnesium, derived from an earth.— e.-moss, n. Any moss of the genus Phascum.— e.-movement, n. Geol. A local rise or subsidence of the earth's surface.— e. of alum, precipitated alumina, used in preparing paints.— e. of bone, calcined bone.— e.-oil, n. [Rare.] Petroleum.— e.-pea, n. A fabaceous vine, the hog-peanut.— e.-pig, n. The aardvark.— e.-pit, n. A pit or trench, covered with a sash, for the protection of plants in winter; a cold-pit.— e.-pitch, n. Mineral. Same as ASPHALT.— e.-plate, n. Elec. A ground-plate.— e.-puff†, n. The puffball.— e.-pulsation, n. A slow undulation of the earth's crust so gradual and slight as to escape ordinary observation.— e.-quadrant, n. One-quarter of the circumference of the earth.— e.-return, n. Elec. The grounding of both ends of a circuit so as to use the earth as a return.— e.-sculpture, n. The effects of external causes upon the earth's crust effected by glacial action, etc.— earth's goal (Astron.), the point upon the ecliptic 90° behind the sun in the direction of which the earth moves.— e.-shadow, n.

Earth-shadows, as observed in the Antarctic Region Sept. 17, 1908.

A hill or mountain projected into an apparently clear atmosphere: probably rendered visible by the presence of fine particles of ice.— e.-shaker, n. Poseidon or Zeus: so designated by the Greek poets.— e.-shine, n. 1. Same as EARTH-LIGHT. 2. Sunlight reflected from the earth so as to illuminate slightly those parts of the moon not in the direct rays of the sun.— e.-shrew, n. A centetoid insectivore.— e.-shrinkage, n. Geol. The reduction of the earth's volume due to dissipation of its internal heat and to a progressive increase in density.— e.-slops, n. Geol. The angle of superficial slope naturally assumed by rock-débris, earthy detritus, etc., when piled up in mounds or ridges. See ANGLE OF REPOSE.— e.-smoke, n. Any plant fumitory.— e.-star, n. A fungus of the genus Geaster, having the outer coat distinct from the inner and split into several reflexed divisions which resemble a star.— e.-spiger, n. [Eng.] One who stops up fox-holes to prevent the animals from escaping.— earth's way (Astron.), the difference between the true and mean motion of the sun at any time and that of the earth in its orbit.— e.-table, n. Arch. A plinth or projecting course resting on the foundation.— e.-tongue, n. A disk-shaped fungus of the genus Geoglossum, found in closely shaven lawns and grass pastures, in bog-moss, and on rotten wood.— e.-treatment, n. Med. The treatment of wounds by the application of dried cleyey earth, finely pulverized, as a desiccating agent, and also as checking putrefaction and promoting the healing process.— e.-tremor, n. A slight earthquake.— e.-wave, n. A vibration of the earth's surface, in which the motion is in a vertical direction.— e.-wax, n. Same as OZOCERITE.— e.-wire, n. A wire used to secure electrical connection with the earth; especially, a wire connecting a telegraph-instrument-circuit to convey leakage to the earth.— earth'wolf'', n. The aardwolf.— golden e., same as ORPIMENT.— good e. (Elec.), an elegant term for describing the earth's lower end of an antenna, the object to be attained being the free passage of electricity in rapid oscillations into and out of the base of the antenna.— grass-e., n. Feather-grass: a name in plowing furnished as the result of additional grass-land.— grass-hearth†.— green e., see CELADONITE and GLAUCONITE.— heavy e., baryta.— Japonic e., see TERRA JAPONICA.— on e. [Colloq.] In existence for emphasis, generally in questions and exclamations; as, how on earth did he come? nothing on earth will prevent him!— rare e. (Chem.), any one of the metallic oxids, including such minerals as beryllia, ceria, erbia, etc.— rare-e. metals (Chem.), the metallic constituents of the several rare earths, as beryllium, erbium, cerium, etc.— red e., see TERRA-ROSA.— residuary e., a soil produced by the process of disintegration.— Santorin e., a fine gray siliceous earth found on the island of Thera (otherwise called Santorin or Santorini) and employed in making cement.— to make e. Elec. 1. To make electric connection between a telegraphic line and the earth. 2. To lead the electricity of electrified bodies to the earth: said of a telegraphic line.— to run to e., to hunt (an animal) to its burrow or to some refuge.— total e., dead earth.

earth'en, 1 ûr'thn; 2 ērth'n, vi. To turn or be changed erth'en, into earth.

earth'en, a. 1. Made of earth or of burnt clay; fictile; as, an earthen pot. 2. Of or pertaining to earth; material; earthly.— earth'en-heart''ed, a. Low and selfish; sordid; gross.

earth'en-ware'', 1 ûr'thn-wār''; 2 ērth'n-wār'', n. Anything made of clay and baked in a kiln or dried in the sun: often used collectively, and sometimes restricted to the inferior grades of pottery as distinguished from porcelain and stoneware. Compare CHINA; PORCELAIN. See POTTERY.

Great is he who enjoys his earthenware as if it were plate, and not less great is the man to whom all his plate is more than earthenware.

earth'less, 1 ûrth'les; 2 ērth'les, a. [Rare.] Free of earth.

earth'li-ness, 1 ûrth'li-nes; 2 ērth'li-nēs, n. 1. The quality of being earthly; extreme materialism or grossness in matters of morals and religion; worldliness. 2. Frailty; mortality.

earth'ling, 1 ûrth'lin; 2 ērth'ling, n. 1. One devoted erth'ling', to worldly things; a worldling.

O'er life's humbled state thine throwing Light the earthling never knew. WHITTIER To — st. 29.

2. A dweller on the earth; a mortal.

earth'ly, | 1 ûrth'li; 2 érth'ly, a. 1. Belonging or pertaining to this world as a system of material things and influences and as distinguished from the unseen and spiritual world; worldly; physical; carnal; as, earthly passions.

The earthliest human soul has an infinite spiritual capacity, and may contain the better world within its depths.
HAWTHORNE Mosses from an Old Manse p. 181. (IL. M. & CO. 1850.]

3. [Colloq.] That can be found anywhere on the earth; hence, possible; imaginable; as, of what earthly use is that? 4†. Earthy.—earth'ly-mind"ed, a. Having a mind devoted to worldly affairs.—e.-mindedness, n.

earth'nut, | ûrth'nŭt; 2 érth'nŭt, n. 1. The tuber of any one of several sedges, especially Cyperus rotundus, the nut-grass, and C. esculentus, a pest in low, moist ground from Maine to Texas. 2. The ground-nut or peanut (Arachis hypogœa). 3. Either of two European herbs (Bunium bulbocastanum and B. flexuosum) of the parsley family or their nutlike tubers. See GROUNDNUT. earth's chest"nut1.

earth'-oil", c.-pea, c.-plate, etc. See under EARTH'S, n.

earth'quake", | ûrth'kwēk; 2 érth'kwāk', n. A vibration or sudden undulation of a portion of the earth's crust; a shaking of the ground. The vibration advances in a series of waves from one or more deeply situated central points called foci, whence they arise from the splitting of a mass of rock, due to contraction of the earth's crust, or from volcanic or other causes. No part of the disturbance may consist of a single shock but shocks, which may continue for days or weeks. Its destructive effects vary largely with the nature of the ground through which it passes and with the position of the place relatively to the focus. No part of the globe is entirely free from earthquakes, but they are most frequent near volcanic regions. The regions bordering the Pacific ocean in both the Old World and the New, the Central American region, including the West Indies, and localities near the Mediterranean, are most often affected.

An Earthnut (Cyperus esculentus), showing a few seconds, or of a series of such pœrus esculentus).

The sudden cessation of accustomed volcanic activity will often bring on earthquakes. . . . The great Calabrian earthquake of 1783, Stromboli, for the first time in the memory of man, ceased erupting.
JOS. LE CONTE Elements of Geol. p. 105. [A. 1878.]

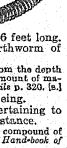
earth'-quave"†; earth'-shock"†.
—earth'quake"shad"ow, n. The complete or partial exemption, experienced in any spot, from the action of a passing earthquake, on account of the checking or reflection of the vibrations effected by the local character or conformation of the subjacent or surrounding ground-bed.—e.-weather, the heavy, oppressive weather popularly believed to precede an earthquake; by extension, any unusual weather associated with an earthquake.—submarine e., an earthquake having its focus below the bed of the sea.



ea'th-quakes", | ûrth'kwāks; 2 érth'kwāks', n. [Dial., Eng.] A species of quaking-grass (Briza media).

earth'stram"or, c.-wire, etc. See under EARTH', n.

earth'ward, | ûrth'ward; 2 érth'ward, adv. Toward the earth. earth'wards†.

earth'work", | ûrth'wûrk; 2 érth'wûrk, n. 1. Fort. An offensive or defensive fortification made largely or wholly of earth. 2. Engin. An engineering operation or work, as cuttings or embankments, requiring the removal of or filling in with earth. 3. Anything similar to a military earth-work, like the structures of the mound-builders. [< AS. eorthweorc, < eorthe, earth, + weorc, work.]

ear'th-worm", | ûrth'wûrm'; 2 érth'wûrm', n. 1. A burrowing terrestrial megadrilic worm: commonly but a few inches long, the a few are from 3 to 6 feet long. Lumbricus terrestris is the best-known earth-worm of Europe.

Darwin has shown that our earth-worms take from the depth and bring to the surface of the soil a very large amount of material. . . . N. S. SHALER Aspects of Earth, Scale p. 320. [c. 1879.]

2. Figuratively, a weak and insignificant being.

earth'y, | ûrth'i; 2 érth'y, a. 1. Of or pertaining to earth or soil; made of earth; as, earthy substance.

The principal earthy matter of our planet is the compound of silicon and oxygen. J. H. APPLETON Beginner's Handbook of Chemistry p. 251. [CHAUT. 1888.]

2. Like or reminding of earth; as, an earthy smell.

All kinds of autumn fungi are characterized by the admixture of some earthy hue. W. FLAGG Year Among the Trees, Autumn Woods p. 190. [n. d. v. 1881.]

3. Unrefined; coarse. 4. Mineral. Roughish to the touch; dull and lusterless. 5. Chem. Possessing the qualities of earths. 6. [Rare.] Dwelling on the earth; earthly.

ear'-ache", ear-wesicle, ear-wax, etc. See under EAR1, n.

ear'wig", | ı'rwig; 2 ér'wig', n. 1. A forficulid; an insect with short fore wings changed into horny wing-covers, and a caudal forceps. Forficula auricularia is the common earwig. It is popularly supposed to enter the human ear. 2. [U. S.] A small centiped, as a geophilid. 3. [Archaic.] Figuratively, a secret or insinuating informer.

The Earwig (Forficula auricularia).
I found soul believe in . . . instigated by some of those dirty earwigs, who will forever insinuate themselves near persons high in office. LEE in Irving's Washington vol. iii, p. 405. [G. P. P. & CO. 1861.]

[< AS. ēarwicga, < ēare (see EAR1, n.) + wicga, an insect; = ear'wig", n.] To influence by secret and stealthy counselings, or to insinuate against by or as by whispering in the ear.

—ear'wig"ger, n. Full of earwigs.—ear'wig"gi-ness, n.

ear'wise, | ı'rwaiz; 2 ér'wig, adv. 1. After the manner of an ear of corn. 2. Through the ear; auricularly.

Eas'dale, | ız'dāl; 2 ēş'dāl, n. An island in W. Argyllshire, Scotland; slate-quarries.

ease, | ız; 2 ēş, vt. [EASED; EAS'ING.] 1. To give ease or relief, either from bodily or from mental pain; cause to rest; relieve; as, this medicine will ease you.

And would on her own palfrey him have eased.
SPENSER Faerie Queene bk. vi, can. 3, st. 32.

2. To render less subject to pressure, tension, weight, etc., by some relieving action; as, to ease a ship by slightly shifting the helm; to ease an axle by shifting the load; to ease a nut by loosening it. 3. To set free or relieve, as a person, from a burden or encumbrance; lighten; unload; usually with of; as, ease me of this burden. 4. [Rare.] To make easy; facilitate. 5. [Colloq.] To relieve by force; rob: with of; as, to ease a man of his purse. 6†. To furnish refreshment, as by food and repose; entertain. [< OF. eser, < aise ease.] eser.

Syn.: SEERLAX.—ease her! the command given to slacken the speed of a marine engine.—e. the helm! the order to put the helm a trifle to midships, to take the strain from the rudder.—to e. away, to slide gradually, as a rope.—easer, n. One or that which eases.

ease, n. 1. A state of body or mind that is free from pain or discomfort of any kind; freedom from labor or effort; rest; tranquillity.

Trouble springs from Idleness, and grievous Toil from needless Ease. B. FRANKLIN Poor Richard, 1738 p. 373. (c. s. P. r. 1890.]

2. Freedom from apparent effort; facility; as, to walk with ease. 3. Freedom from affectation or constraint; easiness. 4. [Rare.] Law. Easement. 5†. State, condition, or means of being entertained or of having gratification; pleasure. 6†. Ability; resources. 7†. Relief; alleviation. [< F. aise, ease.] eşe1.

Syn.: easiness, expertness, facility, readiness. Ease in the sense here considered denotes freedom from conscious or apparent effort in any thing. Ease may be a natural condition or of action; facility is always of action; readiness is of action or of expected action. One lives at ease who has no pressing cares or troubles. One moves or speaks with ease, when wholly without constraint. Facility is always active; readiness may be active or passive: the speaker has a facility of expression, and a ready utterance in readiness for use. Ease of action may imply merely the possession of ample power; facility always implies practice and skill: a man may press down the keys of a typewriter with ease; only the skilled operator works the machine with facility. Easiness applies to the thing done, rather than to the doer. Expertness applies to the mere mechanical dexterity of body and mind; we speak of the readiness of an orator, but of the expertness of a gymnast. Compare synonyms for ABILITY; COMFORT; DEXTERITY.—Ant., annoyance, awkwardness, difficulty, discomfort, disquiet, irritation, perplexity, trouble, uneasiness, vexation, worry.

—at ease, in a state that is free from bodily or mental discomfort or concern.—at one's ease, comfortable.—ease'-off", n. Carp. A smoothing or gradual change of direction at the junction of two pieces, to avoid an unsightly projection or hollow.

ease'ful, | ız'ful; 2 ēş'ful, a. 1. Causing or promoting ease or quiet; comfortable; peaceful.

Many a time I have been half in love with easeful Death.
KEATS Ode to a Nightingale st. 6.

2. Fond of or taking ease; indolent.—-ly, adv.—-ness, n.

ea'sel, | ē'zl; 2 ē'sl, n. A folding frame or tripod with adjustable crosspiece, for use in supporting a panel, canvas, blackboard, portfolio, etc., while in use.

At his easel, eager-eyed. A painter stands.

ease'ment, | ız'ment or -ment; 2 ēş'ment, n. 1. Law. An incorporeal right existing distinct from the ownership of the soil, consisting of a liberty, or use of another's land which is not a profit or compensation. Easements in general may be divided into two classes, namely: (1) apparent easements, in which the exercise of the right involves some permanent evidence of its existence, as a right for water or drainage, a shed, etc.; (2) non-apparent easements, in which such permanent evidence is not involved. Again, they are divided, as to their origin, into the right of use attaches to the person as an individual and not as a property-owner, it is termed an easement in gross, as distinguished from an easement proper, which is known as an easement appurtenant. Another usual subsidiary classification of easements includes the following: affirmative or positive, involving the physical use of the land of another, as in the case of drainage, right of way, etc.; and negative, in which such physical use of another's land is not involved; continuous, in which the right is not dependent for its enjoyment upon an act of man, as the easement for light; and discontinuous, in which active human participation is necessary, as in a right of way. The common-law custom in turn is formed by servitude, and many writers use the terms easement and servitude indiscriminately.

2. Any thing that gives ease or relief; convenience. 3. Carp. An ease-off. 4†. Refreshment; lodging. [< OF. aisement, < aiser see EASE, v.] eas'ingt ese'ment,-easement curve, same as TAPERING CURVE

eas'i-ly, | ız'i-li; 2 ēş'i-ly, adv. In an easy manner; without difficulty, anxiety, or pain; readily; quietly; as, we can easily overtake the fugitives.

east, n. 1. That one of the four cardinal points of the compass which lies at the right hand when one faces the north; strictly, that point of the compass at which the sun rises at the equinox, but in common parlance including the part of the horizon near that point. Since the east and west depend on the direction of the earth's rotation while north and south depend on the direction of its axis, the east of our antipodes is in the opposite direction to our east, while the north is the same.

2. Eccl. The part of a church in the direction of the altar, looking from the nave without regard to the point of the compass. 3. Any region in the eastern part of a country or to the eastward of another taken as a standpoint; as, the east of England; specif. [generally E-], the lands to the east of the Mediterranean, or the region to the east of Palestine, or the countries of southwestern Asia, as Afghanistan, Persia, Asia Minor, Arabia, and Turkey in Europe.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. SHAKESPEARE Macbeth act iv, sc. 3.

In the United States, New England is colloquially spoken of as "down east" and to the eastern seaboard as "down east" is the eastern portion, especially Maine; to the inhabitants of the Mississippi valley "the East" is the region between the Alleghenies and the sea; while the dweller on the Pacific coast regards as "the East" everything east of the Rocky Mountains.

4. Eccl. [E-] The church of the Eastern Empire. 5. [Poet.] The east wind. [< AS. ēast, adv., in the east; cp. L. aur-ora, Gr. ēōs, aúōs, dawn.] —east by north, 11¼° north of east.—e. by south, 11¼° south of east.—east'-north-east', n. 22½° north of east.—e.-southeast, n. 22½° south of east.—Far E., China, Indo-China, Chosen, Japan, and the adjacent islands, Taiwan, Sakhalin, etc.—Near E., Persia, Arabia, and Asia Minor: often made to include Turkey in Europe.

Same as ECCENTRIC, n., 2.— e. theory, a theory that uses an eccentric instead of an epicycle in accounting for the sun's motion.— e. throw, the distance from the center of the eccentric disk or wheel to the center of the shaft it is on. — e. wheel (Mech.), an eccentrically mounted fifth wheel of a carriage arranged to shift the body to one side or the other when backing around, so as to permit of turning in close quarters.— ec-cen'tri-cal-ly, adv.

ec-cen'tric, 1 ek-sen'trĭk; 2 ĕc-cĕn'trĭc, n. 1. Mech. A device for converting continuous circular into reciprocating rectilinear motion, consisting of a disk mounted out of center on a driving-shaft, and surrounded by a collar or strap connected with a rod. Rotation of the driving-shaft gives the rod a back-and-forth motion. 2. Mod. Astron. The circumscribing circle of an elliptic orbit. 3. Anc. Astron. A circular orbit or deferent whose center was not in the earth: an invention to account for those inequalities in the motion of the planets which are now known to be due to the elliptic form of their orbits. 4. Whatever differs from the regular or expected course of action; a person of peculiar habits; one who is odd or queer. 5. Mus. A circle not having the same center as another that partly coincides with it.— adjustable eccentric, an eccentric so slotted that it may be shifted on its shaft to alter its throw. — backward e. (Mech.), an eccentric connected with the reversing-gear of a steam-engine.— ec-cen'tric-hook', n. Steam-engin. An attachment to an eccentric-rod, of V shape or inverted-U shape, to receive the wrist-pin of a rock-shaft; a gab. — e.-rod, n. 1. A rod conveying the motion of an eccentric. See LINK-MOTION.— 2. Auto. The rod connecting an eccentric-strap with such other part as is to have the motion of the eccentric imparted to it. — e.-strap, n. A band (usually made in halves) surrounding an eccentric disk or sheave. — e.-hoop', — movable e., same as ADJUSTABLE ECCENTRIC. — loose e., same as ECCENTRIC, n., 5.

The disk, d, is eccentrically fixed by the key, k, to the shaft, s, and rotary movement of the shaft imparts a reciprocating movement to the connections of the collar, c.

ec'cen-tri'ci-ty, 1 ek'sen-tris'ĭ-ti; 2 ĕc'cĕn-trĭc'ĭ-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tis, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being strikingly different from one's fellows, in one or more particulars; oddity; irregularity; peculiarity; as, eccentricity of taste, disposition, or action. 2. An act or characteristic marked by oddity; as, the eccentricities of genius. 3. Mech. The distance between the centers of two circles or objects, especially where one surrounds and revolves about the other, as in the case of an eccentric sheave and a shaft.

The exact central position of the earth was disproved in two instances, and even the amount of its eccentricity, or distance from the true centre, determined. O. M. MITCHEL Planetary and Stellar Worlds lect. iii, p. 80. [o. m. a. cc. 1870.]

4. Math. (1) The condition or quality of being eccentric. (2) The ratio of the distance between the focus and the center of a conic to half of its transverse axis; formerly, the distance itself. See CONIC SECTION, under CONIC.

Whatever may be the eccentricity of the earth's orbit, the two hemispheres must receive equal quantities of heat per annum.
ARCH. GEIKIE Text-Book Geol. § 3. London, 1882.]

5. Anc. Astron. The distance of the center of an eccentric circle from that of the earth. ex'cen-tric'i-ty†.

SYN.: see ABERRATION.

ec-cen'tro-lin'e-ad, 1 ek-sen'tro-lin'ĭ-ad; 2 ĕc-cĕn'tro-lin'e-ăd, n. Engin. An instrument for drawing eccentric lines in perspective. [< ECCENTRIC + L. linea, line.]

ec'cen-tron'e-ter, 1 ek'sen-tron'ĭ-tər; 2 ĕc'cĕn-trŏn'e-ter, n. An instrument to determine eccentricity, as of a projectile. [< LL. eccentros (see ECCENTRIC) + -METER.]

ec-cesh'a-lo'sis, 1 ek-sesh'ə-lō'sĭs; 2 ĕc'cĕsh'a-lō'sĭs, n. Obstet. The operation of removing the fetal brain to facilitate delivery in difficult parturition. [< EC- + Gr. keph alē, head.]

Ec'-ten, 1 ek'ə-tən; 2 ec'ce-tăn, n. Bib. (Douai).

ec'chon-dro'ma, 1 ek'ən-drō'mə; 2 ĕc'ŏn-drō'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] Pathol. A cartilaginous tumor on the surface of a bone; a tumor originating in cartilage. [< EC- + Gr. chondros, cartilage.] — ec'chon-dro'sis†.

ec'chon-drot'ic, 1 ek'ən-drot'ĭk; 2 ĕc'ŏn-drŏt'ic, a. Same as EPICHONDROTIC.

ec-chon'dro-tome, 1 ek-ən'drə-tōm; 2 ĕc-ŏn'dro-tōm, n. A knife for severing cartilages.

ec'chy-mo'ma, 1 ek'ĭ-mō'mə; 2 ĕc'hy-mō'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] Pathol. An effusion of blood into the cellular tissue beneath the skin, as from a bruise; an ecchymosis. [< EC- + Gr. chymos; see CHYME.]

ec'chy-mosed, 1 ek'ĭ-mōst: 2 ĕc'y-mōst, a. Discolored by reason of a contusion, as in the case of a "black eye."

ec'chy-mo'sis, 1 ek'ĭ-mō'sĭs; 2 ĕc'y-mō'sĭs, n. [-SES, 1 -sīz; 2 -sēs, pl.] Pathol. A discoloration, as a black-and-blue spot, resulting from the rupture of small blood-vessels by a blow or contusion. [< Gr. ekchymasis, < ek, out, + chymos; see CHYME.] — ec'chy-mot'ic, a.

Eccl., Eccles., etc. See ECCLESIASTICUS.

ec'cle, 1 ek'ĭ; 2 ĕc'i, n. [Dial. Eng.] The green woodpecker.

Ec'cle-fech'an, 1 ek'ĭ-fex'ən; 2 ĕc'ĭ-fĕx'an, n. A village in Dumfriesshire, Scotland; birth- and burial-place of Carlyle.

ec'cle-grass', 1 ek'ĭ-gras'; 2 ĕc'ĭ-grăs', n. [Orkneys.] The butterwort.

Ec'cles, 1 ek'lz; 2 ĕc'lz. 1. Ecclesfield, A town in Lincolnshire, England.

Ec'cles-hill, 1 ek'lz-hil; 2 ĕc'lz-hĭl, n. A town in the West Riding, Yorkshire, England.

ec-cle'si-a, 1 c-kĭl'zi-ə; 2 ĕ-clē'zhi-ə, n. [-s, 1 -i; 2 -ē, pl.] 1. The popular or legislative assembly in Athens and other ancient Greek states, in which every free citizen could vote.

No motion or overture with regard to the affairs of the commonwealth could take its origin in the ecclesia.
TYLER Unita. Hist. vol. i. bk. i. p. 187. [U. S. M. 1834.]

2. Eccl. A body of Christians organized for worship and religious work; a church; congregation: a name used in Greek and Latin literature to designate the early church. [L., assembly, < Gr. ekkleesia, < ekkaleō, < ek, out, + kaleō, call.] — ec-cle'si-al†, a. Ecclesiastical.— ec-cle'si-an, n. One who supports the principle of the supremacy of the church over the state.
— ec-cle'si-arch, n. 1. A church-ruler, especially one in high authority. 2. A sacrist or sacristan of the Greek Church: a kind of chief sexton.

ec-cle'si-ast, 1 ĕ-clē'zi-ast; 2 ĕ-clē'ji-ast, n. 1. An ecclesiastic or administrator of church affairs. 2. [E-] "The Preacher," the author of the book of Ecclesiastes.
3. [Rare.] A member of the ecclesia in ancient Athens.

The pay of the senators was a drachma for every day on which they sat: of the ecclesiasts at first an obol.

ec'cles'tree', 1 ĕ-clĕs'trē; 2 ĕ-clĕs'trē‴, n. [PROV. Eng.] Axle-tree.

ec'co-pet, n. Surg. An oblique incision of a part without removal of substance: a division of the skin only.

ec'co-prot'ic, 1 ĕk'o-prot'ĭk; 2 ĕc'o-prŏt'ic, a. & n. Med. Laxative; a mild cathartic. [< Gr. ekkoprōtikos, < ek, out, + kopros, dung.] — ec'co-prot'i-cal†.

ec''cri-nol'o-gy, 1 ĕk''ri-nŏl'o-ji; 2 ĕc''ri-nŏl'o-gy, n. Med. The branch of medical science relating to the excretions; a treatise on the excretions. [< Gr. ekkrinō (< ek, out, + krinō, separate) + -OLOGY.] ec-cres''i-o-lo'gi-cal, a. — ec''cri-nol'o-gist, n.

ec''cri-si-os'cine-sis, 1 ĕk''ri-si-os'ĭ-ni-sĭs; 2 ĕc''ri-si-ŏs'cĭ-ne-sis, n. Pathol. The checking or retention of an excretion or of a critical discharge. [< Gr. ekkrisis (see ECCRISIS) + schesis, state.]

ec'cri-sis, 1 ĕk'ri-sĭs; 2 ĕc'ri-sis, n. Med. Expulsion of any waste or morbid matter; substance excreted. [< Gr. ekkrisis, separation, < ek, out, + krinō, separate.]

ec-crit'ic, n. Med. A medicine conducive to excretion.

ec-crit'i-ca, 1 ĕ-krĭt'ĭ-kə; 2 ĕ-crĭt'i-ca, n. pl. Pathol. A class of diseases connected with the functions and organs of excretion. 2. Medicines that act specifically on the excretions. [< Gr. ekkritos, separated, < ek, out, + krinō, separate.]

ec''cy-cle'ma, 1 ĕk''sĭ-sĭ-klī'mə; 2 ĕc''cy-cle'ma, n. [Gr.] Class. Antiq. A machine or device in the theater for disclosing to the audience, either by bearing it forward on wheels or by rolling aside the back-scene, a scene previously concealed from view. Compare EXOSTRA.— ek''lĭ-klĭ'ma.

ec''cy-e'sis, 1 ĕk''sĭ-sĭ'sĭs; 2 ĕc''cy-e'sis, n. Pathol. Extra-uterine gestation. [< Gr. ekkyeō, bring forth, < ek, out, + kyeō, be pregnant.]

ec-cyl'i-o'sis, 1 ĕk-sĭl'ĭ-ō'sĭs; 2 ĕc-cĭl'i-ō'sis, n. Pathol. A disease proceeding from or incidental to development. [< Gr. ekkyliosmai, be unrolled, < ek, out, + kyliō, roll up.]

ec-cys'tis, 1 ĕk-sĭs'tĭs; 2 ĕc-cĭs'tis, n. Pathol. A displacement of the urinary bladder by turning in a direction outward over the pubes. [< EC- + Gr. kystis; see CYST.]

ec-dem'ic, 1 ĕk-dĕm'ĭk; 2 ĕc-dĕm'ic, a. Med. Arising in a distant locality: applied to diseases as opposed to endemic. [< EC- + Gr. dēmos, people.]

ec-de'mi-o-ma'ni-a, 1 ĕk-dī'mi-o-mē'ni-ə; 2 ĕc-dē'mi-o-mā'ni-a, n. Pathol. A form of mental derangement characterized by a morbid desire for wandering. [< Gr. ekdemia, going abroad, + mania, madness.] ec''de-mo-ma'ni-ac, ec'de-nite, 1 ĕk'dĭ-nait; 2 ĕc'de-nit, n. Mineral. A vitreous yellow to green lead chlorarsenite ($Pb_8As_2O_7Cl_4$), crystallizing in the tetragonal system. [< EC- + Gr. demas, body.]

ec'der-on, 1 ek'dĕr-on; 2 ĕc'dĕr-on, n. The most superficial layer of the skin or of a mucous membrane; the epidermis. [< EC- + Gr. deros, skin, < derō, flay.] — ec''der'ic, a.

ec'dy-sis, 1 ek'dĭ-sĭs; 2 ĕc'dy-sis, n. [-SES, 1 -sĭz; 2 -sēz, pl.] Zool. The act of casting off an integument, as in serpents and insects; a molting; a coming out. [< Gr. ekdysis, < ekdyō, put off, < ek, out, + dyō, enter.]

ec-dy'ses, 1 ĕk'dĭ-sēz; 2 ĕc-dy'ses, n. [-SES, 1 -sĭz; 2 -sēz, pl.] Zool. The act of casting off an integument, as in serpents and insects; a molting; a coming out. [< Gr. ekdysis, < ekdyō, put off, < ek, out, + dyō, enter.]

ec-dy'sis, 1 ĕk'dĭ-sĭs; 2 ĕc-dy'sis, n. Pathol. The adjustment of a plant to a new habitat. [< Gr. oikesis, habitation.]

ec-eth'moid, 1 ek-ĕth'moid; 2 ĕc-ĕth'moid, a. Same as ETHMOID.

ec'go-nin, 1 ek'go-nĭn; 2 ĕc'go-nin, n. Chem. A colorless crystalline alkaloid ($C_{11}H_{13}NO_3$) formed by heating cocain with hydrochloric acid to 100° C. [< Gr. ekgonos, born, < ek, out, + gignomai, be born.] ec'go-nine†.

E-cha'gue, 1 ē-chä'gwē; 2 e-chä'gwe, n. A town in Isabella province, Luzon Island. P. 7,000.

E-cha'la, 1 ɪ-kē'yə; 2 e-cē'ya, n. Bib. (Douai).

é'chan'guette', 1 ē'shŏn'gĕt'; 2 e'shŏn'gĕt', n. [F.] A bartizan.

E-che-ga-ra'y, 1 ē'chĕ-gə-rī'; 2 e'che-ga-rī', José (ʰᵒsē'1832–1916). A Spanish physicist and dramatic author, sharer (with Mistral) of the Nobel prize for literature, 1904.

ech'e-lon, 1 ĕsh'ĭ-lŏn; 2 ĕch'e-lon, n. 1. Mil. An arrangement of troops in the form of steps, each rank or division being parallel with the others, but in the same alinement. Direct echelon is when the divisions move directly to the front in unison: oblique echelon is when each division or echelon of the whole is oblique to the original front: adapted for changing position or direction of the whole line.

Order in Echelon.

The oblique attack, or the attack by column coming up after column, has from experience achieved the most decisive success in war. A. ARNOLD, Jn. Eve. Copy. vol. i. p. 5. [N. 1842.]

2. Naut. A position of vessels in which they stand on parallel courses, each being to the right or left and in advance of the next astern. Battalions (a) and companies, each being (b) stand fast, each being put in march when it has the space it is, however, oblique to the fixed distance from the one course. 3. Optics. A device next preceding, continuing in front of, and in the same plane with, the form indicated by the black figures.

To advance in echelon, the base battalion (c) is designated by the chief of the order given. At the command, battalion (c) advances in line, as indicated by the arrow. Battalions (a) and (b) stand fast, each being put in march when it has the space it is, however, oblique to the fixed distance from the one course. 3. Optics. A device next preceding, continuing in front of, and in the same plane with, the form indicated by the black figures.

It produces spectra like those of a grating. [< F. échelon, < échelle, ladder, < L. scala, < scando, climb.] ech'el-lon†.— ech'e-lon, v. a. & n. To form in echelon.

Ech'e-ne-ĭd'i-dæ, 1 ek'ĭ-nē-ĭd'ĭ-dē; 2 ĕc'e-nē-ĭd'i-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of discocephalous fishes with a fusiform body and terminated by an elliptical disk; remoras or sucking-fishes. Ech'e-ne'is, n. (t. g.) [L., < Gr. echeneis, remora, < echō, hold, + naus, ship.] Ech'e-ne-ĭd'i-dæ, ech'e-ne'ĭd, ech'e-ne'ĭs, ech'e-ne'ĭs-did, n.— ech'e-ne'ĭ-doid, ech'e-ne'oid, a. & n.

e-che'um, 1 ɪ-kī'ŭm; 2 e-cē'ŭm, n. [E-CHE'A, pl.] Arch. One of a series of bell-shaped vases, said by Vitruvius to have been introduced to fill the fissures in a sounding-board in ancient Greek theaters. [< L. echea, pl., < Gr. echeia, pl. of echeion, gong, < echos, sound.]

ech'e-vin†, n. [F.] The warden of a gild; a municipal magistrate; one whose duties are similar to those of aldermen.

ech'i-as'ter, 1 ek'ĭ-as'tər; 2 ĕc'i-ăs'ter, n. Spong. A variety of stellate spicule. [< Gr. echinos, hedgehog, + astēr, star.]

e-chid'na, 1 ɪ-kĭd'nə; 2 e-cĭd'na, n. 1. [-NÆ, 1 -nē; 2 -nē, pl.] A tachyglossoid egg-laying monotrematous mammal of Australia, etc., having a vermiform tongue, tubularsnout with nostrils near the tip, visceral feet, and strong spines intermixed with hair. 2. [cap.] A cupine anteater. 3.

E-chid'na, n. Gr. Myth. A monster, half woman and half serpent; daughter of Tartarus, mother of Cerberus and the Sphinx. [L., < Gr. echidna, adder, < echis, adder.]

e-chid'nase, 1 ɪ-kĭd'nās; 2 e-cĭd'na. Anathenase extracted from the venom of vipers and believed to produce a rise in temperature. [< ECHIDNA.]

E-chid'ni-dæ, 1 ɪ-kĭd'nĭ-dē; 2 e-cĭd'ni-dē, n. pl. Mam. The Tachyglossidæ.— e-chid'noid, a. & n.

e-chid'nin, 1 ɪ-kĭd'nĭn; 2 e-cĭd'nin, n. Chem. A clear, viscid, yellowish secretion of the poison-glands of certain serpents; also, a nitrogenous base contained in it. [< L. echidna; see ECHIDNA.] e-chid'nine†.

e-chid'no-tox'in, 1 ɪ-kĭd'no-tŏks'ĭn; 2 e-cĭd'no-tŏks'in, n. A toxic principle derived from the venom of vipers.

e-chid'no-vac'cine, 1 ɪ-kĭd'no-vak'sin or -sēn; 2 e-cĭd'no-văc'cin or -cin, n. An antitoxin for the venom of vipers obtained by heating the venom to 75° C. and thus rendering it harmless. [< ECHIDNA + VACCINE.]

Ech'i-ny-i'næ, 1 ek'ĭ-nĭ-ai'nē; 2 ĕc'i-ny-i'nē, n. pl. Mam. A subfamily of octodontoid rodents having deep and curved enamel folds and fur mixed with spines, as in the hutias. E-chi'mys, n. (t. g.) [Prop. ECHINOMYS, < ECHINO- + Gr. mys, mouse.] — e-chi'my-line, a. & n.

echin., abbr. Echinology.

ech'in-, [1 ek'in-, ĕch'in-; 2 ec'in-, ĕc'in-. From e-chi'no-,] Greek echinos, hedgehog, sea-urchin: combining forms.

Words beginning with these prefixes will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

Ech'i-na'ce-a, 1 ek'ĭ-nē'shi-ə; 2 ĕc'i-nā'she-a, n. Bot. A small genus of perennial erect herbs of the aster family, natives of North America. They have undivided leaves, heads of tubular and radiate flowers, the rays usually purple, and bristled achenes. The pappus is a short denticulate crown; purple cone-flower. [< Gr. echinos, hedgehog.]

ech'i-nal, a. Of or pertaining to a sea-urchin.— Ech''i-nas'ter, n. [-TRI, pl.] Echin. A family of erect pentonemate starishes with a reticulate abactinal skeleton. Ech'i-nas'ter, n. (t. g.)— ech''i-nas'ter-id, n.— ech''i-nas'ter-oid, a.— ech'i-nate, a. To render prickly or bristly.— ech'i-nate, a. Set or armed thickly with prickles; spiny, like the hedgehog.— ech'i-na''ted†.— E-ch'i-ni-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A family of echinoideans, esp. disdematoidaceans having tests with equal diameters, the ambulacral plates each perforated by pores in triplets, tentacles all alike, and jaws with epiphyses; sea-eggs. E-chi'ni-dæ; Ech''i-noi'dæ.— e-chi'nid, n.— e-chi'ni-dan, n.— Ech''i-nid'e-a, n. pl. Echin. The Echinoidea.— e-chi'ni-form, a. Having the form of a sea-urchin or sea-egg, as certain insect-eggs.— e-chi'nite, n. A fossil echinoderm or sea-egg.— e-chi'ni-tal, a.— Ech''i-no-bar'ri-dæ, n. pl. Ircinith. A family of tapeworms having a neck and two suckers armed with hooks: parasitic on sharks. E-chi''no-both'ri-um, n. (t. g.)— ech''i-no-both'ri-id, n.— ech''i-no-both'ri-oid, a.— E-chi''no-cac'tus, n. Same as ANACANTHUS.— E-chi''no-cac'ti, n. pl. Same as ANACANTHUS.— E-chi''no-cac'tus, n. [-TUSES, pl.] Bot. A family of bird parasites with armed acetabula, and the postellum provided with one or two circles of hooks. E-chi''no-cot'y-le, n. (t. g.)— ech''i-no-cot'y-le-an, n. & a.

E-chi''no-cys'tis, n. [-TIDES, pl.] Bot. Same as MICRAMPELIS. 2. A genus of cystideans of the family Cryptocrinitæ, found in the Silurian formations.

E-chi''no-cys-ti'de, n. pl. A division or group of Palechinoidea (Cystocidaroida family) with each interambulacral zone of several rows of plates and anus eccentric.

E-chi''no-cys'ti-tes, n. (t. g.)— e-chi''no-cys'ti-id, n.— e-chi''no-cyst'o-lid, a.— Ech''i-no-der'ma-ta, n. pl. Echinoderm. A large division of animals having variously ranked, esp. a branch of metazoans with distinct alimentary canal, generally a radiate arrangement of parts, and exoskeletal elements often combining to form a rigid skeleton, as in the crinoids, sea-urchins, starfishes, and holothurians. E-chi''no-der'ma, n.— e-chi''no-der'ma-tous, a. Of or pertaining to the Echinodermata; echinodermal.— E-chi''no-dis'tus, n. pl. Conch. The Conulidæ.— e-chi'noid, a. & n.— e-chi'noid. I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the Echinidæ or Echinoidea. 2. Echiniform. II. n. One of the Echinidæ or Echinoidea.— Ech''i-noi'de-a, n. pl. Echin. A large group of echinoderms, variously ranked; esp., an order having a solid (rarely flexible) test composed of numerous plates and armed with spines articulating with tubercles covering the surface, typically with a circular periphery, but varying to ovate and other shapes: including sea-urchins, sea-eggs, and sea-plates. Ech''i-noi'da, n. pl. Echin. Same as ech''i-nol'o-gy, n. The branch of zoology that treats of the echinoderms.— ech''i-nol'o-gist, n.— E-chi'no-met'ri-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A family of disdematoidean echinoderms having external gills, ambulacral plates with three or more pairs of pores, and pyramids of jaws with epiphyses. E-chi''no-met'ra, n. (t. g.)— e-chi''no-met'rid, n.— e-chi''no-met'roid, a.— E-chi''no-my'a, n. pl. Mam. The Echimyinæ. E-chi'no-mys, n. (t. g.)— e-chi''no-my'ine, a. & n.— E-chi''no-ne'i-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A family of spatangoid echinoideans having ambulacra medium-sized or narrow and alike, and no floscelle. E-chi''no-ne'us, n. (t. g.) E-chi''no-ne'i-des‡; Ech''i-non'i-dæ‡.— ech''i-no-ne'oid, a.— ech''i-no-ne'ous, a.— E-chi''no-ni'na, n. pl. Spong. A suborder or other group of ceratosilicious sponges.
— e-chi''no-pa'di-um, n. [-DI-A, pl.] Echin. The bilaterally symmetrical ciliated larva of an echinoderm.— e-chi''no-pa'dic, a.— Ech''i-noph'i-dæ, n. pl. Ichthyol. An inflammatory disease of the eyelids in which the eyelashes project rigidly like bristles.— e-chi''no-pla'ci'd, a. Echin. Having a circle of spines on the madreporic plate, as a starfish.— e-chi''no-pla'te-us, n. Zool. The free-swimming larva of a sea-urchin. e-chi''no-plu'te‡.— e-chi''no-proc'tous, a. Having a spiny rump, as certain porcupines (genus Erethizon). E-chi'nops, n. Bot. 1. A genus of white, woolly perennials of the aster family, natives of the Mediterranean region; the globe-thistles. They have a globose inflorescence with white or blue florets and a bristly involucre. The silvery white stems and prickly foliage make these plants valuable for shrubberies and wild gardens. 2. [E-] A plant of this genus.— Ech''i-nop'sid, n. An American plant. Same as CEREUS.— E-chi''no-rhin'i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of sharks with thorn-like tubercles, two dorsal fins far behind, and no anal. E-chi''no-rhi'nus, n. (t. g.)— e-chi''no-rhin'oid, a.— E-chi''no-rhyn'chi-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of acanthocephalous worms.— e-chi''no-rhyn'chid, n.— e-chi''- no-rhyn'choid, a.— E-chi'no-rhyn'chus, n. Helminth. 1. A genus typical of Echinorhynchidæ. 2. [c-] A worm of this genus, as E. gigas, found in the pig.

ech'i-no'sis, 1 ek-ı-nō'sıs; 2 ĕk-ı-nō'sıs, n. A condition of the blood observed in animals suffering from surra, anemia, etc. [< Gr. echinos, hedgehog.]

E-chi'no-sphæ-ri'tes, n. Paleon. A cystid with the ambulacral grooves short and confined to the summit. A valvular pyramid protects the anal opening: frequently found in great abundance in the Lower Silurian of Scandinavia and Russia.

e-chi'no-sphæ'rite, n.—e-chi'no-sphæ'ri-dæ, n. pl.

A family of diadematoidean echinoideans having the test flexible and ambulacral plate alone continued beyond the peristome to the mouth. E-chi'no-thu'ri-a, n. (t. g.) E-chi'no-thu'ri-dæ, n. pl.—e-chi'no-thu'ri-an, a. & n.—e-chi'no-thu'ri-oid, a.—E-chi'no-zo'a, n. pl. Zool. The Annuloida.—e-chin'u-late, a. Having small prickles or bristles.—e-chin'u-li-form, n.—e-chin'u-li-form, a. Having the form of small spines.

e-chi'nus, 1 -kı̆-nus; 2 ē-ci'nŭs, n. [-NI, 1 -nı; 2 -nī, pl.]

1. Arch. (1) A circular cushion molding of hyperbolic or quarter-round section under the square abacus of a capital, as in the Doric order. See illus. under CAPITAL. (2) A molding of similar hyperbolic or quarter-round profile to the Doric echinus; especially, the egg-and-dart molding. 2. A sea-urchin or echinoid. 3. [E-] Echin. A genus typical of Echinidæ. E. esculentus is the edible sea-urchin of Europe. 4. A hedgehog. [L., < Gr. echinos, hed'gehog, sea-urchin.] e-chi'noid.

e-chlo'ro-phyll'ose, 1 ē-klō'rō-fĭl'ōs; 2 ē-klō'rō-fĭl'ōs, a. Bot. Destitute of chlorophyl. [< E- + CHLOROPHYL.]

ē'chō'gue-tē', 1 ē'shı̆'kō-tē'; 2 ē'çhĭ'ke-tē', a. [F.] Her. Checky.

ech'ī-re'tin, 1 ek'ı-rē'tın; 2 ĕk'ı-rē'tĭn. n. Chem. An amorphous, dextrorotatory compound ($C_{35}H_{52}O_2$) obtained from dita-bark. [< ECHITES + -RETIN.]

Ech'is, 1 ek'ıs; 2 ĕk'ĭs. n. Herp. A genus of Oriental desert vipers, the sand-vipers, characterized by small, keeled lateral scales, and the habit of squirming beneath the surface-sand. Cf. echis, adder.

e-chit'a-min, 1 ı-kit'a-mın; 2 e-cit'a-mĭn. n. Chem. An alkaloid ($C_{28}H_{21}N_3O_4+4H_2O$) in the bark of certain trees of the genus Alstonia. [< echites + -amine.]

e-chit'e-in, 1 ı-kit'ı-ın; 2 e-cit'e-ĭn, n. Chem. A colorless, crystalline, dextrorotatory compound ($C_{14}H_{17}O$) obtained from dita-bark. [< ECHITES + -EIN.]

ech'i-tin (ek'ı-tın), 1 ek'ı-tın; 2 ĕk'ĭ-tĭn, n. Chem. An amorphous alkaloid ($C_{32}H_{47}NO_4$) obtained from dita-bark.

E-chi'tes, 1 ı-kai'tiz; 2 e-cī'tēz, n. A genus of handsome evergreen twiners of the dogbane family, natives of tropical America. They have opposite leaves and corymbose purple or yellow flowers with salver-shaped corolla. Several species are in cultivation. [L., < Gr. echitēs, < echis, adder.]

ech'i-tin, 1 ek'ı-tın; 2 ĕk'ĭ-tĭn, n. A colorless, crystalline, dextrorotatory compound ($C_{14}H_{17}O$) obtained from dita-bark.

Ech'i-um, 1 ek'ı-ʊm; 2 ĕk'ĭ-ŭm, n. Bot. A large genus of hairy herbs or half-shrubs of the borage family of the Old World, with one-sided clusters of flowers. E. vulgare, the viper's-bugloss, a blueweed or viper's-bugloss, is widely naturalized in eastern North America. [< Gr. echion, plant, < echis, viper.]

Ech'i-ni'da, 1 ek'ı-nai'dı; 2 ĕk'ĭ-nī'dă, n. pl. Helminth. A family of cephyreans having a long proboscis overhanging the mouth and a single pair of ventral setæ. Ech'i-nu'ra, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. echis, viper, + oura, tail.]—ech'i-u'rid, n.—ech'i-u'roid, a.

Ech'i-u-rol'de-a, 1 ek'ı-yu-rol'di-ə; 2 ĕk'ĭ-yu-rŏl'dē-ă, n. pl. Helminth. An order or suborder of Gephyrea; the Chætifera. [< Echiurus + -oid; -ea.]—ech'i-u-rol'de-an, a. & n.

ech'o, 1 ek'o; 2 ĕc'o, v. & n. I. t. 1. To reflect or repeat the sound of; send back an echo of; reverberate.

These cliffs [about Rossenal had echoed the roar of Rodney's guns on the day which saved the British Empire.

FROUDE Eng. in West Indies p. 143. [s. 1888.]

2. To reproduce or imitate faithfully, as thoughts, sentiments, or utterances; as, the child echoes the parent; to resemble, as a writing.

II. i. 1. To give back or repeat a sound; resound; reverberate; as, the very heavens echoed with the noise. 2. To be reflected or returned by repetition; as, the song echoed from the mountainside. 3. To utter a sound that reverberates. 4. Whist. (1) To signal in a plain suit for a trump lead in reply to a partner's call: as when numerically strong in trumps it is thought more advantageous for one's partner to lead them. (2) To signal for a continuance of a trump lead, when trumps are actually led by a partner: in this instance, a player echoes in the trump suit.—echo, n.—echo-ing-ly, adv.

ech'o, n. [ech'oes, pl.] 1. A repetition of sound; a sound given back by or reflected from an opposing surface and returned to its source; as, an echo from a wall. 2. Reproduction of another's views or thoughts; a close imitation or copy; also, an immediate and hearty response; as, the press is an echo of public sentiment; kind words find an echo in the heart. 3. An imitation of the style or peculiarities of another person; also, the one who so imitates. 4. Arch. A place where a projected sound is heard to advantage; specif., a vault or arch, usually elliptic or parabolic, that either redoubles sounds or produces distinct echoes. 5. Poetry. A verse consisting of a refrain, one that repeats the syllable or the syllables of the line preceding. 6. [E-] Class. Myth. An Oread, or mountain nymph, who pined away in unrequited love for the youth Narcissus till nothing was left but her voice.

Compell'd me to awake the courteous Echo
To give me answer from her mossy couch.

SHAKSPERE Comus l. 275.

7. Mus. (1) The repetition of a phrase in soft tone. (2) An echo-stop; an echo-organ. 8. Whist. A response to a partner's trump-signal, and made in the same manner. See note, n., 4; TRUMP, v. 9. [cap.] = ec'ho'ic-ek'ho'ı.—echo sign (Pathol.), a repetition of words in speech or writing occurring in epilepsy.—ech'o-stop'', n. Mus. An organ-stop for producing echo-like effects; also, a harpsichord-stop for giving the effect of distant sound.—Irish e., an echo different from what was originally uttered, as in the extract—

But civilly spake 'How d'ye do, Paddy Blake?'
The echo politely says 'Very well, thank you!'

SAMUEL LOVER Paddy Blake's Echo st. 1.

—multiple echoes, reiterating echoes.—plain-suit e. (Card-playing), the playing by the third hand, as in whist, or bridge, of a particular card in the suit led to indicate to a partner the number of cards held in a suit. When the card played signifies that the third hand can trump the suit in the third round, this play in bridge is called the down-and-out e.—to the e., loudly; exactly; strikingly: said generally of applause.—ech'o-ic, a. Pertaining to echoism or onomatopœia.—ech'o-ist, n. A maker of words by repetition or imitation of sounds.—ech'o-ize, vt. To make words by imitating sounds heard.—ech o-less, a.—ech'o-y, a. [Rare.]

ech'o-ism, 1 ek'o-ızm; 2 ĕc'o-ĭzm, n. Philol. Word-making by imitation of a sound heard; onomatopœia: as in the words hiss, hum, whippoorwill.

ech'o-ki-ne'sis-a, 1 ek'o-kı-nī'sı-s; 2 ĕc'o-kĭ-nē'sĭ-ə, n. Med. An involuntary, aimless mimicry of actions. [< Gr. echō, echo, + kinēsis, motion.]—ech'o-ki-ne'sis.

ech'o-la'li, 1 ek'o-lē'lı; 2 ĕc'o-lā'lĭ, n. pl. Persons in the hypnotic state who repeat words spoken to them.

ech'o-la'li-a, 1 ek'o-lē'lı-ə; 2 ĕc'o-lā'lĭ-ă, n. Pathol. The senseless reiteration by sufferers from some forms of nervous disease, or by hypnotic subjects, of words addressed to them or heard by them: applied by Max Nordau to a meaningless jumble of words in poetry. [< Gr. echō, echo, + lalia, babble.] ech'o-phra'si-a.

Ech'ols, 1 ek'olz; 2 ĕc'ŏls, n. A county in S. E. Georgia; 365 sq. m.; county-seat, Statenville.

e-chom'e-ter, 1 ek-ɒm'ı-tər; 2 ē-cŏm'e-tĕr, n. An instrument for measuring and comparing the duration of sounds. [< Gr. ēchō, echo, + metron, measure.]—e-chom'e-try, n. 1. The art of sound-measuring. 2. Arch. The art of constructing according to acoustic principles.

e-chop'a-thy, 1 ı-kop'a-thi; 2 ē-cŏp'a-thy, n. Pathol. A morbid tendency to repeat words purposelessly and automatically. [< Gr. ēchos, sound, + pathos, suffering.]

ec-lec'tic, 1 ek-lek'tık; 2 ĕc-lĕc'tĭc, a. 1. Selecting, according to taste or judgment, from different systems or sources; advocating eclecticism; as, eclectic philosophers. 2. Composed of selections; as, eclectic poetry.

The Epistle of St. Clement is thoroughly eclectic, but the eclecticism is as devoid of genius and originality as an ordinary modern sermon. J. B. LIGHTFOOT Early Essays p. 57. [s. p.]

3. Broad in matters of taste and belief; liberal; unfettered. [< Gr. eklektikos, < ek, out, + legō, select.]

—eclectic medicine, any medical or remedial system compounded of selected parts of other remedial systems; specifically, a school of medicine in the United States, the followers of which principally employ indigenous vegetable remedies and aim to conserve the vital energy of the patient. They generally discard venesection and poisonous mineral remedies, and many of them in later years have embraced the German dogma of specific medication.—e. method, see ECLECTICISM, 2.—e. physician, 1. One who practises medicine pursuant to the eclectic system. 2. One of an ancient Greek school said to have been founded by Agathinus of Sparta.—E. school. 1. The Bolognese school of painting. See BOLOGNESE. 2. A French school founded by Delaroche in the early 19th century. 3. See ECLECTICISM.—E. school of medicine, see ECLECTIC MEDICINE.—ec-lec'ti-cal, a.—ec-lec'ti-cal-ly, adv.

ec-lec'tic, n. One who believes in or practises selection from all systems or sources, especially in philosophy, in painting, or in medicine. ec-lec'tist.

ec-lec'ti-cism, 1 ek-lek'tı-sizm; 2 ĕc-lĕc'tĭ-çĭsm, n. 1. The combination of various elements derived from diverse systems of opinion or practise in any science or art; an eclectic method or system, as in medicine or religion.

The Gospel . . . was not the result of a shrewd eclecticism, which sought to blend certain elements of each in a wider scheme of reconciliation. STORRS Divine Origin of Christianity lect. x. p. 330. [s. a. n. 1884.]

2. Philos. A system composed of doctrines selected from different sources. It is opposed to skepticism, inasmuch as it does not doubt the possibility of systematic philosophy; it differs from syncretism in that it does not seek to modify antagonistic systems so as to bring them into a complete mutual consistency; but it chooses whatever seems true in each system with a view to a compound that shall include the excellences of all and the deficiences and untruths of none. The eclectic method has resulted in various schools, of which the following are among the chief: (1) The Greek school, which had its origin in the skeptical spirit, developed its form of eclecticism in the second half of the second century B. C. Its earlier and most efficient supporters were Posidonius and other Stoics, who supplemented the doctrines of the Stoa by borrowing from Platonism and Aristotelianism in their common antagonism to Epicurean doctrines. In Rome the same movement was represented by such philosophers as Cicero, Seneca, and Epictetus. (2) The Neo-Platonic school of Alexandria (300–400 A. D.), regarded by some as eclectic, but by others as syncretistic, as its teachings were dominated by certain principles of religious mysticism. (3) The Spiritualistic school, in the 19th century, represented by Victor Cousin, who held that human speculation was summarized in four systems, skepticism, idealism, sensism, and mysticism.

In philosophy the best example of eclecticism is found in the Neoplatonism of the Alexandrine school, while among modern eclectics Leibnitz and Cousin may be mentioned.

New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. Relig. Knowl. vol. iii, p. 71. s. v. ec. '00.]

3. That which is conceived or formed eclectically. ec-lec'tism.—ec-lec'ti-cize, vt. To treat eclectically.

ec-legm'i-ze, n. A semifluid medicine composed of oils and syrups, especially one licked from a spoon; a linctus.

ec-lim'e-ter, 1 ek-lim'ı-tər; 2 ĕc-lim'e-tĕr, n. A hand-instrument for measuring zenith-distances of objects near the horizon.

Ec"li-pi-dril'i-dæ, 1 ek"lı-pı-dril'ı-dı; 2 ĕc"lı-pı-dril'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of lumicolous worms with two primary longitudinal vessels. Ec"li-pi-dril'us, n. (t. g.) e'clip-sa're-on, 1 ı'klip-sē'rı-ɒn; 2 ē'clĭp-sā'rē-ŏn, n. [Artificial.] A globe-shaped toy for illustrating solar and lunar eclipses.

e-clipse', 1 ı-klips'; 2 e-clĭps', n. [e-CLIPSED', E-CLIP'ING; e-clips'e, 1 ı-klıps'ıng; 2 e-clĭps'ĭng, vt. 1. To cause an eclipse; darken or hide, as one heavenly body another; as, the moon eclipses the sun. 2. Figuratively, to cast into the shadow; dim or hide the brightness of; especially, to surpass so as to obscure.

Christianity soon eclipsed or destroyed all other sects, and became for many centuries the supreme ruler of the moral world.

LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. i, p. 373.]

ec"o-nom'ics, 1 ek'o-[or ı'co-]nom'ıks; 2 ɛc'o-[or ē'co-]nŏm'ics, n. 1. The science that treats of the development of material resources, or of the production, preservation, and distribution of wealth, and of the means and methods of living well for the state, the family, and the individual; political economy.

Economics, regarded by earlier writers on the subject, particularly by English economists, simply as the science of material wealth, is now coming to be looked upon as the science of man's temporal well-being in the widest sense. It may be divided into three great branches: (1) pure economics, the science of economic principles, which concerns itself only with general principles, and has often been restricted to purely material considerations; its opposite is sometimes called applied economics, a branch dealing with the application of these principles; (2) social e., which applies these principles to problems connected with the growth and well-being of organized society; and (3) national e., which studies them from the point of view of the statesman, and treats of such questions as the tariff, taxation, currency, and public education or the belief that each nation should produce enough for its own requirements. Economics has also been divided, since the early days of the science, into parts treating respectively of production, distribution, and consumption.
2. [Archaic.] Domestic economy; the art or service of household management.— dynamic e., the science of economic tendencies and forces as contrasted with economic conditions.

e-con'o-my, 1 ı-kon'o-mı; 2 ē-cŏn'o-my, n. [-MIES, 1 -miz; 2 -mız, pl.] 1. Disposition to save or spare; carefulness in outlay; freedom from extravagance or waste; frugality; as, a man of economy; economy of words; economy of time.

Economy is . . . the growth of experience, example, and foresthought. . . . It is only when men become wise and thoughtful that they become frugal. Samuel Smiles Thrift p. 14. [1875.]

2. Cheapness of operation, relative or absolute, as expressed in steam, fuel, or money. 3. The management of household matters: usually with a qualifying adjective; as, domestic economy.

Economy no more means saving money than it means spending money. It means, the administration of a house; its steward-ship; management, in short, whether money or time, or anything else, to the best possible advantage.
Ruskin A Joy For Ever lect. i, p. 7. (G. A. 1880.]

4. No person can be called educated, until he has organized his knowledge into family.

E. P. Whipple Character essay iii, p. 66. [r. a. p. 1866.]

Syn.: instructed, learned, skilled, trained, well-informed. In speaking of one as educated, we imply, not merely that he has acquired knowledge, but that his mental powers have been developed and disciplined to effective action. A graduate of a common school is fairly educated; a college graduate is liberally educated; a master of science is learned; a diligent reader is well-informed. Compare synonyms for WISDOM.— Ant.: boorish, ignorant, illiterate, uneducated, unlearned, unlettered, unskilled, untaught, untutored.

ed'u-ca'tion,] 1 ej'u-[or ed'yu-]kā'shən; 2 ēj'u-[or ēd'yu-]cā'shon, n. 1. The process or the result of educating; the systematic development and cultivation of the normal powers of intellect, feeling, and conduct, so as to render these efficient in some particular form of living, or for life in general.

Education, as understood to-day, connotes all those processes cultivated by a given society as means for the realization in the individual of the ideals of the community as a whole. It has for its aim the development of the powers of man (1) by exercising each along its peculiar line, (2) by properly coordinating and correlating them, (3) by reducing advantage of the law of habit, and (4) by appealing to human interest and enthusiasm. It includes not only the narrow conception of instruction, in which it was formerly limited, but embraces all forms of human experience, owing to the recognition of the fact that every stimulus with its corresponding reaction helps to affect one's character. It may be either mainly esthetic, ethical, intellectual, physical, or technical, but to be most satisfactory it must involve and develop all these sides of human capacity.

The educational systems of Great Britain and the United States is usually classified under four broad headings, (1) primary education, the imparting of the first elements of knowledge, usually in elementary schools common, or preparatory schools; (2) secondary e., that obtained in grammar schools, high schools, and private academies; (3) higher e., the undergraduate and postgraduate courses at colleges and universities; and (4) professional e., that which fits the individual for his particular career or profession. In all of these departments there is a tendency to break down the barriers of the old monastic and academic traditions that have so long been dominant and to make the systems of instruction elective and vocational, thus encouraging the development of individual effort and promoting specialization along evolutionary lines. In both Great Britain and the United States great advances have recently been made in the field of commercial education, which aims to give a scientific training in the structure and methods of modern industry and commerce to those contemplating a business career. This has been taken up by the colleges and by the high schools with complete or partial commercial courses to the student. In the United States, Scotland, and Wales coeducation is the rule, while in England and Ireland it is the exception, as is the case of certain elementary schools. In Great Britain the elementary schools are wholly and the secondary schools occasionally under government control, as represented by the Board of Education or by educational commissions. In the United States the primary and secondary schools are under local control, except the Bureau of Education acting as an advisory and statistical board for the nation at large. See also Chautauqua system, correspondence school, under school, and university extension, under extension.

There is a growing and surprisingly unanimous conviction regarding the directions in which improvement should be made in our system of higher education. It is to be more professional, more vital, more democratic. Elmer E. Brown Report of Commissioner of Education vol. i, p. 21. [govt. pro. off. '06.]

2. Training resulting from the pursuit of a complete course in an institution of learning, or of a special course, as in law, medicine, art, mechanics, or the like; the methods in which education is carried on. 3. Instruction as a system, science, or art; pedagogy. 4. The training of animals. 5. The culture of bees, silkworms, bacteria, etc.; a brood or culture of such creatures.— education for efficiency, the training of every citizen, individually and socially, in such a way as to obtain the greatest measure of fitness for life in each member of a group or society, as well as in such a society as a whole.

Education for efficiency means all of these things; but it means much more. . . . It means the training of each human being to use his hands deftly, to observe accurately, to reason justly, to express himself clearly . . . that he shall learn to cooperate with his fellows for harmonious ends. Frederick W. Taylor H. Maxwell Journal of the Nat. Educational Assn. July, 1905, p. 61.

Syn.: breeding, discipline, instruction, knowledge, learning, nurture, study, teaching, training, tuition. Compare synonyms for EDUCATE.

Education (L. educere, to lead or draw out) is the systematic development and cultivation of the mind and other natural powers. "Instruction is the harmonious development of all our faculties. It begins in the nursery, and goes on at school, but does not end there. It continues through life, whether we will or not. . . . 'Every person,' says Gibbon, 'has two educations, one which he receives from others, and one, more important, which he gives himself.'" John Lancshock The Use of Life ch. vii, p. 111. [Macm. 1894.] Instruction, the imparting of knowledge by others (L. instruere, to build in or into), is but a part of education, often the smallest part. Teaching is the more formal and less formal word for instruction. Training refers not merely to the imparting of knowledge, but to the exercising of one in actions with the design to form habits. Description is systematic and rigorous training, with the idea of subjection to authority and perhaps of punishment. Tuition is the technical term for teaching as the business of an instructor or as in the routine of a school; tuition is narrower than teaching, not, like the latter word, including training. Study is emphatically what one does for himself. We speak of the teaching, training, or discipline, but not of the education or tuition, of a dog or a horse. Breeding and nurture include teaching and training, especially as directed by and dependent upon home life and personal association; breeding having reference largely to manners with such qualities as are deemed distinctively characteristic of high birth; nurture (literally nourishing) having more direct reference to moral qualities, not overlooking the physical and mental. Knowledge and learning tell nothing of mental development apart from the capacity to acquire and remember, and nothing whatever of that moral development which is included in education in its fullest and noblest sense; learning, too, may be acquired by one's unaided industry, but any full education must be the result in great part of instruction, training, and personal association. Compare KNOWLEDGE; REFINEMENT; WISDOM.— ed"u-ca'tion-al, a. Of, belonging, or pertaining to education. ed"u-ca'tion-a-ry.— ed"u-ca'tion-al-ist, n. 1. One interested in educational forms or methods; one employed in educational pursuits; a practical educator. 2. Same as EDUCATIONIST.— ed"u-ca'tion-al-ly, adv.— ed'u-ca'tion-ist, n. One versed in educational theories or devoted to educational interests.

egg, n. 1. The body that is extruded from the ovary of the females of various animals, as birds, most reptiles and fishes, the monotremes among mammals, and insects and most other invertebrates. In a bird's egg there are: (1) A thin but firm calcareous shell with minute pores for the passage of air. (2) A tough, double skin, the membrana putaminis. (3) A semifluid mass, the white, or albumen. (4) A ball of yellow, nutritive material, the yolk, which floats in the albumen, supported at each end by a spiral membrane, the treadle, or chalaza. (5) A circular spot, of protoplasmic material, the tread, or cicatricle (the germ), situated on the upper side of the yolk. In most animals the egg is simple in structure, being little more than a germ-cell, or an embryo, with an enveloping membrane. The egg of an insect has a single outer coat, and this is often ribbed, or pitted, and sometimes is covered with spines. The eggs of birds vary in the complexity of their envelops, their capacity, and their size, in this last particular ranging from those of the fairy hummingbird, a little over a quarter of an inch long, to those of the extinct epyornis, from twelve to fourteen inches long. In various groups of invertebrates the ovum is developed without fertilization. See PARTHENOGENESIS.

I think that, if required, on pain of death, to name instantly the most wonderful thing in the universe, I should risk my fate on a bird's egg. T. W. HIGGINSON Out-Door Papers p. 297. [c. a. r. 1863.]

ego, 1 eg'o or ī'go; 2 ĕg'ō or ī'gō, n. [L.] The "I" which thinks, feels, and acts; the conscious individual as distinguished from the "not I" and from his own states. The word was introduced from the Latin into philosophy by Descartes, but it is now in general use in all kinds of literature. 2. Psychol. & Philos. Among students of psychology and metaphysics the word ego has acquired several meanings, according to the character and import of theory which have been incorporated with it; of these meanings the following are most important: (1) In scholastic philosophy, it included the entire man, body and mind; (2) in later metaphysics, it meant the permanent thing, whom all the conscious states and attributes belong, the mind or soul considered as an entity; (3) in modern psychology, the ego has come to be taken rather as the subject of each conscious act or state, a part of phenomena; personality, at least, must be allowed as due to the activities of self-consciousness and recognitive memory; the Self as involving the distinction between "me" and "the other," and a certain organization, in fact, of the mental states.

We are immediately conscious in perception of an ego and a non-ego, known together, and known in contrast to each other. SHALTUCK Metaphysics in L. Xiv. p. 205. 1a. & c. 1859.]

3. Theos. The immaterial and enduring self, slowly developed by experiences gathered and assimilated during various existences on the lower planes; the self whose evolution commences on the lowest plane, and that functions on the astral and manasic planes till finally perfected on the spiritual; man divested of his physical body.

— absolute ego, the non-individual being, neither subject nor object, which posits the world of individual egos and non-egos; a term used by the German idealist, J. G. Fichte.— ag'oal'tru-ism, n. Devotion to the welfare of others combined with respect for the self.— ego-altruistic, a. Of or pertaining to both self and others; as, justice is an ego-altruistic sentiment.

Very much of the feeling ordinarily classed as generosity is ego-altruistic.
SPENCER Principles of Psychol. vol. ii. pt. ix, p. 613. [a. 1883.]
— ego-ddea, n. Psychol. The empirical idea of the self, regarded as a sort of composite memory-image.— empirical ego, the self as, in fact, known to itself, that which each one of us calls me.— pure ego, the thinking self, as distinguished from its objects of thought, and from its own states or powers: the pure principle of personal identity.

Archeol.* The anointing-room in an ancient bath: the unctuarium.

El''a-gab'a-lus, 1 el''a-gab'a-lus; 2 ĕl''a-găb'a-lŭs, M. A. Antoninus (204–222), Emperor of Rome; defeated Alexander Severus; killed by his soldiers.

El'ah, 1 ī'la; 2 ē'la, n. Bib. Gen. xxxvi, 41. [Heb., oak.]

El'a-i, 1 ĕl'a-ī; 2 ĕl'a-ī, n. Chem. Same as ELEIC. [< Gr. elaikos, < elaia, olive-tree.]

el'a-id'ic, 1 e'la-id'ik; 2 ē'la-ĭd'ic, a. Chem. Of or derived from oleic acid or elain. [< Gr. elaia (elaid-), olive-tree.]— elaidic acid, a crystalline compound ($HC_{18}H_{33}O_2$) isomeric with oleic acid.— e. esters (Chem.), the salts of elaidic acid. e-elaid'ate, n.— e-la'i-date, n. A salt of elaidic acid.

e-la'i-din, 1 i-lē'in; 2 ē-lā'ĭ-din, n. A crystalline compound ($C_{57}H_{104}O_6$) isomeric with olein. [< Gr. elaia, olive.]— e-la'i-nine†.—e-laidin (Chem.), a crystalline mixture of oils made by adding nitrous acid, which converts the olein into solid elaidin. Drying oils remain unaffected by this test; semidrying oils become partly solid; and non-drying oils, solid.— e-la'id-in'ic, a. Of or pertaining to elaidin; as, elaidinic acid, an acid isomeric with oleic acid.

e-la'lin, 1 i-lē'in; 2 ē-lā'ĭn (XIII), n. Same as OLEIN. e-la'line, 1 e'la-lin; 2 ē'la-lĭn, n. Same as HELEN, in Tennyson's Idylls of the King, " the lily maid of Astolat," who pines and dies for love of Lancelot.

E-lap'i-dæ, 1 i-lăp'i-dē; 2 ē-lăp'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of tyrannoid birds having weak feet, thin tarsi, and compressed bills. E-lap'i-na, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. elaion; see ELÆO-.] E-lap'ni-i'næ; E-lap'ne-i'næ.— e-lap'ni-ine. a. & n.

el'at-o-, 1 el'ĕ-o-; 2 ĕl'a-o-. From Greek elaion, olive-oil: a combining form. See ELÆO-.

el'a-od'ic, 1 el'a-od'ik; 2 ĕl'a-ŏd'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from castor-oil. [< Gr. elaiodēs, oily, < elaion (see ELÆO-) + eidos; see -OID.] — elaidic acid, same as RICINOLEIC ACID.

el'a-o-plast, 1 el'ĕ-o-plast; 2 ĕl'a-o-plăst, n. Bot. One of the highly refractive oil-secreting protoplasmic granules found near the nuclei of plant-cells. [< ELAIO- + Gr. plastos, formed.] el'e-o-plast.

el'a-pel'de-hyde, n. Chem. Same as PARALDEHYDE. [< ELÆO- + ALDEHYDE.]

El'am, 1 ī'lam; 2 ē'lam, n. Bib. A kingdom on country S. of Assyria. Gen. x, 22. [Heb., youth.]

El:a-mar'na, n. Same as TEL-EL-AMARNA.

E'lam-ite, 1 ī'lom-ait; 2 ē'lam-īt, n. A native or inhabitant of Elam, ancient name of a district south of Assyria and west of Persia, at present Khuzistan.— E'lam-ite, E'lam-it'ic, E'lam-it'ish, a.

el'an', 1 ĕl'ĭn'; 2 ē'lĭn', n. [F.] A brilliant or impetuous rush of feeling or action; ardor; dash, as of troops in an attack.

e-lanc', 1 i-lanz'; 2 ē-lănz', vt. [Rare.] To throw, cast, or hurl out like a lance; launch.

Lucifer: Though a thousand worlds . . . were elanced Each minute into life unendingly.

BAILEY Festus, A Mountain sc. 4.

The African Eland. 1/12

e'land, 1 ī'lond; 2 ē'land, n. 1. A large ox-like African antelope (Oreas canna) with twisted horns in both sexes, and in the males a large dewlap and small mane: now rare except in the remote interior; the huge herds formerly common in South Africa having been almost exterminated by the advance of civilization, owing to the slowness of the animal and its heavy weight, the males sometimes weighing 1,500 lbs. 2. The moose or elk. [< D. eland, elk, < Lith. elnis, elk.]

el'a-net, 1 el'a-net; 2 él'a-nĕt, n. A kite (genus Elanus), as the American white-tailed kite. [< Gr. elanos, a kite.]

El'a-nus, 1 el'o-nus; 2 él'a-nŭs, n. Ornith. A genus of birds of prey, comprising certain of the smaller kites. [< Gr. elaunō, drive.] See KITE.

el-la'o-lite, el'a-op'tene, etc. Same as ELEOLITE, etc.

El'a-pha-bo'li-a, 1 el'a-fo-bō'lĭ-a; 2 él'a-fŏ-bō'lĭ-a, n. pl. [Lc.] Class. Antiq. A festival held annually in Phœis in honor of Artemis Elaphiobolos, as goddess of the chase. [< Gr. elaphobolos, deer-slaying, < elaphos, deer, + ballein, throw.]

El'a-phe-bo'li-on, 1 el'a-fi-bō'lĭ-on; 2 él'a-fĕ-bō'lĭ-ŏn, n. [Gr.] A Greek month. See CALENDAR.

el'a-phine, 1 el'a-fin; 2 él'a-fĭn, a. Of or pertaining to the genus Elaphus or stag (Cervus elaphus) or related species. [< Gr. elaphos, stag.]

El'a-pho-my'ces, 1 el'a-fo-mai'sēz; 2 él'a-fo-mī'çēz, n. Bot. A genus of subterranean truffle-like fungi about the size of walnuts. They belong to the order Aspergillales, are parasitic on the roots of certain conifers, and grow about three inches below the surface of the soil. Hogs and other animals unearth them and eat them greedily. [< Gr. elaphos, deer, + mykēs, mushroom.]

el'a-phure, 1 el'a-fiūr; 2 él'a-fĭūr, n. A Chinese deer (Elaphurus davidianus) with a long tail, and the antlers rising straight from the brow and giving off long back branches. [< Gr. elaphos, stag, + oura, tail.]

el'a-phur'rine, 1 el'a-fiū'rin or -rin; 2 él'a-fŭ'rĭn or -rĭn. I. a. Of or pertaining to a group of deer, including the elaphure. II. n. An elaphurine deer.

Antlers of the Elaphure. 1/35

E-lap'i-dæ, 1 e-lap'i-dī; 2 ē-lăp'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of venomous snakes with grooved poison-fangs and short, rather solid upper teeth, and without post-frontal bones; coral-snakes, etc. [< ELAPS.] E-lap'si-dæ, 1 e-lap'si-dī; 2 ē-lăp'sĭ-dē, n. = el'a-pid, n. – el'a-pine, a. & n. – el'a-poid, a. & n.

el-lap'sion, 1 e-lap'shon; 2 ē-lăp'shŏn, n. [Rare.] A clearing away or ridding of stones.

El'aps, 1 e-laps'; 2 ē-lăps', n. Herp. 1. A genus typical of Elapidæ. 2. [e-] A snake of this genus. [< L. elops; see ELOPS.]

el-lapse', 1 l-laps'; 2 ē-lăps', vi. [E-LAPSED', E-LAPS'ING.] = el-laps'ing, 1 = 2. To glide or slip by; pass away; quietly terminate: said of time; as, many days have elapsed. 2†. To slip away, as from memory; lapse. [< L. elapsus, pp. of elabor, glide away, < e, from, + labor, slide.]

el-lapse', 1 e-laps'; 2 ē-lăps', n. [Rare.] The process or act of elapsing: a passing away: lapse.

el-laq'ue-ate, 1 l-laq'wi-ēt; 2 ē-lăk'wē-ĕt, vt. [Rare.] To untangle; unsnare; disentangle.— el-laq'ue-a'tion, n.

El A-ri'chi, 1 el a-ri'chi; 2 él a-rĭ'chĭ, n. 1. A government of Egypt. 2. Its principal town.

El'a-sa, 1 el'o-sa; 2 él'a-sa, n. Bib. (Apocrypha; Douai; R. V.).

El'a-sah, 1 el'e-sa; 2 él'a-sa, n. Bib. Ezra, x, 22.

El'as-map'o-da, 1 el'as-map'o-da; 2 él'as-măp'o-da, n. pl. Echin. A group of holothurians with the ventral aspect sole-like. [< Gr. elasma, plate, + pous, foot.] El'a-sip'o-dat, – e-las'ma-pod, a. & n. – el'as-map'o-dous, a.

e-las'mo-, 1 l-las'mo-; 2 ē-lăs'mŏ-. From Greek elasmos, metal plate (< elaunō, beat out) + combining form.— E-las'mo-bran'chi-l, n. pl. Ich. A class or subclass of fish-like vertebrates having no membrane-bones to the skull or external girdle, placoid scales, and slits of gills, five (rarely six or seven) pairs of lamelliform gills attached by their distal ends, and complicated brain with optic nerves forming a chiasma: includes rays, and chimæras.

– e-las'mo-branch, e-las'mo-bran'chi-an, e-las'mo-bran'chi-ate, a. & n.— El'as-mog'na-tha, n. pl. Conch. A superfamily of lamellibranchs having a jaw with a single quadrangular plate deflected from the basal margin, as in succinelds.— el'as-mog'na-thous, a.— e'las-mom'e-ter, n. An interferometer specially designed for measuring the elasticity of flexure.— e'las-mom'e-try, n. An elasmosaurus.

– E-las'mo-sau'ri-de, n. pl. Herp. A family of sauropterygian reptiles with the cervical ribs single-headed.— e-las'mo-sau'rid, n. – e-las'mo-sau'roid, a. – E-las'mo-sau'rus, n. Herp. 1. A genus typical of Elasmosauridæ. 2. [e-] A long-necked fish-like reptile of this genus.— E-las'mo-the'ri-um, n. – E-las'mo-the'ri-um, n. Mammal. A genus typical of Elasmotheriinæ. 2. [e-] [-RI-A, pl.] A very large rhinoceros-like mammal of this genus.

El'as-som'i-de, 1 el'a-som'i-di; 2 él'a-sŏm'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of acanthopterygian fishes having a compressed body, cycloid scales, no lateral line, short dorsal fin with four spines, and anal fin with three spines: including the tiny perches. El'as-som, 1 el'a-som; 2 él'a-sŏm, n. Gr. elassō, make less, < elassōn, compar. of elachys, small.] El'as-so-mat'i-dæ:, – el'as-some, e-las'so-mid, n. – -moid, a. & n.

e-las'tase, 1 l-las'tes; 2 ē-lăs'tās, n. Elec. Capacity of a dielectric for opposing electric charge or displacement.

e-las'tic, 1 l-las'tik; 2 ē-lăs'tĭc, a. 1. Spontaneously returning to or toward a former size, shape, or attitude after being compressed, expanded, or distorted in any way; springy; rebounding; as, an elastic whalebone; elastic gas; an elastic step.

Just as actually existing solid is perfectly rigid, so no known solid is perfectly elastic.

G. F. BARKER Physics p. 143. [ɪɴ. ʜ. & co. 1892.]

2. That may be extended or contracted with facility; capable of ready adjustment, easily changed, adapted, or arranged according to circumstances, accommodating; as, an elastic contract; elastic morals.

Training, in order to be adequate, must be to some extent elastic, adapting itself to the numerous differences among young minds. SULLY Teacher's Hand-Book Psychol, p. 65. [A. 1887.]

3. Having the capacity of rapid recovery from depression or misfortune; buoyant; as, an elastic temperament. 4. Econ. Increasing or diminishing readily in response to a changing stimulus, demand, or other causative influence; as, an elastic price, one that soars or drops quickly owing to sudden variations in demand. 5. Mech. Adjusting or adapting itself readily to varying loads; flexible. 6†. Hurling missiles by the rebounding of a spring, as a catapult. [< Gr. elaunō (ela-), drive.]

e-las'ti-ci-ty, 1 l-las-tis'i-ti; 2 ē-lăs-tĭç'ĭ-tĭ, n. 1. That property of matter by virtue of which a body tends to return to a former or normal size, shape, or attitude, after being deflected, compressed, expanded, twisted, or drawn; the rebounding quality of bodies; resilience; springiness; as, the elasticity of the air; the bow has lost its elasticity.

Elasticity may be (1) of volume, as when a gas is compressed, or (2) of form (rigidity), as when a solid is distorted.

Electrical elasticity is that property in virtue of which a body requires force to change its bulk or shape, and requires a continued application of the force to maintain the change, and spring back when the force is removed. Wm. THOMSON Math. and Phys. Papers vol. iii, art. xiii, pt. i, p. 3. [c. & s. 1890.]

2. The tendency to recover from depression or misfortune; buoyancy; also, the capacity for adjustment or accommodating circumstances; as, elasticity of temper; elasticity of youth. 3. The modulus of elasticity. See MODULUS. – e-las'tic-ness [Rare], = elasticity of elongation, the ratio of tensile stress per unit of area to the resulting elongation per unit of length of a substance which is subjected to either compression or stretching along its longitudinal axis; it is measured by the modulus of elasticity.— e. of flexure, the elasticity or power of resistance shown by a substance which is subjected to either compression or stretching in a transverse direction.— e. of liquids, the tendency of liquids, whose volume has been changed by pressure, to return to their original volume.— limit of e., the point of stress beyond which an elastic body loses power to return completely to its former shape and size.— perfect e., the state or quality of being perfectly elastic.— rotational e., the elasticity or power of resisting rotatory force.

e-las'tive, 1 l-las'tiv; 2 ē-lăs'tĭv, n. Elec. An insoluble substance per unit volume of dielectric: a proposed word.

e-las'tose, 1 l-las'tōs; 2 ē-lăs'tōs, n. Physiol. Chem. One of the forms of peptone produced by the gastric digestion of elastin. [< ELASTIN.]

e-latch'ee, 1 l-lach'i; 2 ē-lăch'ē, n. [Hind.] Cardamom.

e-late', 1 l-lēt'; 2 ē-lāt', vt. [E-LAT'ED; E-LAT'ING.] 1. To raise the spirits of; inspire; cause to feel exultation or triumphant; stimulate; excite; also, to puff up; as, victory elates him; he was greatly elated.

I was more excited and elated by the special message of President Lincoln than I have been by any victory we have gained. A. H. CONANT in R. Colliyer's Man in Earnest, Apr. 7, 1862, p. 80. [L. & s. 1872.]

2. To lift up; elevate. [< L. elatus, pp., < ex, out, + latus, borne.]— e-lat'ed-ly, adv.— e-lat'ed-ness, n.— e-late'ment, n.— e-lat'er, n. One who or that which elates. e-la'ter†.

e-late', a. Exalted or triumphant in spirit; exultant.

A noble, kindly spirit, not elate
That he was famous, but that Song was great.
LOWELL Under the Old Elm, Poet. Works of the Author of The Biglow Papers vol. ii, p. 11.

2. [Archaic.] Raised; lifted up. – e-lat'ī.

el'a-ter, 1 el'a-ter; 2 él'a-tĕr, n. 1. A click-beetle or elaterid. 2. Entom. (1) [E-] A genus typical of Elateridæ. (2) The springing or clicking bristle-like abdominal appendages of a springtail or podurid insect. 3. Bot. (1) In the Equisetaceæ family, one of the four club-shaped membranous bands attached at a single point on a spore from the splitting of the outer coat. (2) A sterile, elastic, spirally twisted filament associated with the spores, as in liverworts. 4†. Spring; elasticity, especially bias of a body. [< Gr. elatēr, driver, < elaunō, drive.]

e-lat'er-ate, 1 l-lat'er-it; 2 ē-lăt'ĕr-ĭt, n. Archæol. One who manufactured the kind of terra-cotta that the density of gases is proportional to the pressure.

e-lat'e-ri-um, 1 el'a-ti-ri-um; 2 ē-lă'tē-rĭ-ŭm, n. Chem. A greenish to yellowish substance in the juice of the fruit of the squirting cucumber (Ecballium elaterium). It contains elaterin. [< Gr. elatērios, driving, < elaunō, drive.]

el'a-ter-om'e-ter, 1 el'a-ter-om'i-ter; 2 él'a-ter-ŏm'ĕ-tĕr, n. An instrument that shows the pressure of a gas. [< Gr. elatēr (see ELATER²) + -METER.] el'a-trom'e-ter†.

el'a-ter'o-phore, 1 el'a-ter'o-for; 2 él'a-tĕr'ō-fōr, n. Bot. An organ of liverworts consisting of a tuft of numerous thread-like cells attached to the base of the capsule.

El'ath, 1 l'lath; 2 ē'lăth, n. Bib. Deut. ii, 8.

El'a-thi-na'ce-æ, 1 el'a-thi-nai'si-ī; 2 él'a-thĭ-nā'çē-ē, n. pl. A family of small polypetalous marsh-loving herbs – the waterwort family, of the order Hypericales – with opposite entire leaves and minute axillary chicken-foot-like flowers.

El-a'thes, n. (1, 2) [L., < Gr. elatinē, kind of toad-flax, < elatē, silver fir, < elaunō, drive.] El'a-tin'e-æ:, – el'a-ti-na'ceous, a.

e-la'tion, 1 l-lē'shan; 2 ē-lā'shŏn, n. A jubilant or triumphant state of mind; buoyancy; exaltation.

Assured of his personal success . . . he felt no elation and no sense of triumph over his opponents. NICOLAY AND HAY Abraham Lincoln vol. ix, p. 375. [c. c. 1890.]

e-la'tion, 1 l-lē'shan; 2 ē-lā'shŏn, n. Gram. Of the highest e-la'tive, } degree; especially, being of the absolute or ine-la'tive, } dependent as opposed to the relative superlative.

el'a-trom'e-ter, 1 el'a-trom'i-ter; 2 él'a-trŏm'ĕ-tĕr, n. A gage for measuring the rarefaction of air in the receiver of an air-pump. [< Gr. elatēr (see ELATER²) + metron, measure.] el'a-ter-om'e-ter†.

el'lax-a'tion†, n. The act of unloosing.

el'e-, 1 el'i-; 2 él'ĕ-, Chem. Ethylene: so called originally by Berzelius. [< ELEO- + -YL.] el'a-yle†.

El'ba, 1 el'ba; 2 él'ba, n. An island on the Tuscan coast of Italy; 86 sq. m.; the place of Napoleon's exile, from May 3, 1814, to Feb. 26, 1815. It was raised to a sovereignty for Napoleon by the Treaty of Paris in 1814.

Elbe, 1 elb or elbe; 2 élb or élbe, n. A river of Germany flowing from the Bohemian Alps, 725 m. N. W. to the North sea.

El'beuf, Gl'bœf'd', 1 gl'bœf' del'bœf'; 2 ghĭ'bœf' dĕl'bœf' (1752–1794). A French Venetian leader; Comte de Lillebonne. Cholete, etc.; shot.

El Bek'a-a', 1 el bek'a-a'; 2 él bĕk'a-ä'. See CŒLE-SYRIA.

El'ber-feld, 1 el'ber-feld; 2 él'bĕr-fĕlt, n. A manufacturing town in Rhine province, Prussia; weaving, dyeing, and cloth-printing.

El'ber'tia, 1 el'ber'shi; 2 él'bĕr'shĭ-a, n. Bib. (R. V.). Judges ix, 46.

El'bert, 1 el'bert; 2 él'bert, n. 1. A masculine personal name. 2. El-be'rus, 1 el-bi'rus; 2 él-bĕ'rŭs. A county in central Colorado; 1,852 sq. m.; county-seat, Kiowa. 3. A county in N. E. Georgia; 338 sq. m.; county-seat, Elberton.

El'bert Mount'ain. A peak in Colorado; 14,351 ft. high.

El'ber-ton, 1 el'ber-tan; 2 él'bĕr-tŏn, n. A town, county-seat of Elbert county, Ga.

El-beth'el, 1 el-beth'el; 2 él-bĕth'ĕl, n. Bib. Gen. xxxv, 7.

El'beuf', 1 el'bœf'; 2 él'bœf', n. A manufacturing town in Seine-Inférieure department, France.

El'bing, 1 el'bing; 2 él'bĭng, n. A fortified town near the mouth of the Elbing river, Prussia; shipyards; iron-works.

el'bow, 1 el'bo; 2 él'bo, n. I. t. 1. To effect (a passage) by or as by the use of the elbows; as, to elbow one's way. 2. To push or punch with or as with the elbows; crowd; shove; as, to elbow people aside. 3. To get rid of or evict (a person) indirectly.

In the course of three centuries and upwards . . . the prior had nearly been elbowed out of the abbot's chair by the arch-deacon. IRVING Washington vol. i, ch. i, p. 10. [G. p. s. 1863.]

II. i. 1. To turn or bend in the manner of an elbow; make a bend or angle; as, the gas-pipe elbows at the ceiling. 2. To use the elbows in pushing; hence, to be rude or aggressive. SYN.: see JOSTLE.

el'bow, n. 1. The region at the junction of the upper arm and forearm; the bend of the arm, or the joint at the bend of the arm. 2. Any outward bend resembling the bent elbow. (1) A short pipe-fitting, making a joint between two pipes at an angle (usually 90°) to each other; an elt or L. (2) A bend or angle in a wall or in a parapet. (3) A projection on the side of a chair or sofa, on which to rest the arm. (4) A bend or side of a window or other recessed opening. (5) A sudden bend in a stream or channel. (6) A promontory. 3. [Prov. Eng.] The joint resembling an elbow in the shoulder or hock of a quadruped. [< AS. elboga, < el-, for with bēag, bend.] el'bow, n. = at one's elbow, conveniently near; at hand.— capped e. (Vet.), a swelling on the elbow caused by excessive pressure; as by lying with the fore feet bent under the body.— e. grease, n. [Colloq.] Strength in or proficiency for work; as, to put one's e. to the grindstone.— e. guard, n. Same as ELBOW-PIECE.— e. in the hawse, a twist in a ship's cable or hawser, caused by her swinging twice the wrong way on an open hawse.— e. joint, n. 1. The articulation between the bones of the upper arm and forearm. 2. A joint where two pipes meet at an angle.— e. piece, n. A piece of armor guarding the elbow, or worn on the elbow. See illus. under ARMOR, 16.— e. guard; – e. plate, n. 1. The bed-plate or bed-knife of a rag-cutting machine: so called when it has an obtuse angle in the middle. 2. An elbow-piece.— e. rest, n. A strip running lengthwise in a railway-car at about the height of the elbow of a seated passenger.— e. room, n. Room for the free use or movement of the elbows; figuratively, scope for activity or occupation.— e. scissors, n. Scissors with a bent shank or blade.— e. shaker, n. [Slang.] A dive-shaker; pantomime-shaker.— e. shield, n. = ELBOW-GUARD.— elbows of the Mincio [U. S.], the typographical result of a journalist's confusion of ideas. The following passage gave rise to the phrase:

If we follow the windings of the Mincio, we shall find countless elbows formed in the elbows of the regular army, at places like Saltanza, Malini, and Sommacampagna, after a battle of several hours' duration, the Sardinians at Goito gave way; and, if we follow up the course or the Mincio we shall find innumerable elbows formed by the sympathy of youth.

New-York Times July 16, 1859, p. 4, col. 2.

– e.-tongs, n. pl. Tongs curved outward in the jaws.— elbe e., (Carriagebuilding), the portion of the wooden framework of a carriage which is used as an elbow-rest.— more power to your e. [Colloq.], keep on with your good work; may you have increased success.— out at the elbows, having holes in the elbows of one's coat; shabbily dressed; seedy.— to crook the e., to drink.— up to the elbows, deeply involved or engaged.

El'bows, n. In Shakespeare's Measure for Measure, a foolish but well-meaning constable.

el'bowed, } 1 el'bod; 2 él'bŏd, a. Shaped like an elbow.

el'buck, 1 el'buk; 2 él'bŭk, n. [Scot.] Elbow.

El-burz', 1 el-burz'; 2 él-burz', n. 1. A mountain range S. of the Caspian sea, in Persia; its highest peak, Demavend, is about 20,000 ft. high. 2. The highest peak in the Caucasus mountains and in Europe; 18,526 ft. high.

See under MOMENT.— e. motor, a machine for transforming electric energy into mechanical energy: the opposite of the dynamo.— e. musket, a musket arranged to be fired by electric current.— e. organ, an organ having an electric action.— e. pen, a pen driven by electric current.— e. pencil, a pencil for use in manifolding letters drawings, etc. A minute motor gives a rapid vibratory motion to a needle-point, perforating the paper over whose edges it is drawn. The paper is afterward used as a stencil.— e. perforator, an electric pencil.— e. organ, an organ having an electric action.— e. pen, a pen driven by electric current.— e. pencil, a pencil for use in manifolding letters drawings, etc. A minute motor gives a rapid vibratory motion to a needle-point, perforating the paper over whose edges it is drawn. The paper is afterward used as a stencil.— e. photometer, an instrument measuring the luminous intensity of an electric arc.— e. projectile, a torpedo.— e. regulator, a device for regulating or controlling electric machinery.— e. repulsion, the mutual repulsion manifested by bodies that are in similar electric condition.— e. saw, an incandescent wire employed in cutting. — e. siphon, a siphon in which electricity operates automatically as stoppings for removing the accumulated air, which otherwise would stop the flow of liquid.— e. sterilization, the destroying of germs in a fluid by means of an electric current.— e. strain, the deformation resulting from an electric stress.— e. stress, the pressure or force which performs gins or the like within an electric field.— e. sunstroke, an effect similar to sunstroke sometimes experienced by those exposed to intense electric light for a long period.— e. tape, a tape of insulating material.— e. target, a target electrically registering the shots that strike it.— e. thermometer, an apparatus for measuring the temperature of an electrical discharge on a metal by the changes in temperature.— e. torch, a gas-lighter operated by electricity.— e. town, a town supplied with electricity for lighting.— e. typewriter, a typewriting-machine in which the letters are impressed by an electric action.— e. varnish, a varnish that serves as an insulator.— e. wave, a vibration or pulse of electromagnetic force. electromagnetic wave, etc.— e. whirl, a magnetic whirl.

e-lec'tric, 1 r-lek'trik; 2 e-lec'tric, n. 1. Any electrified body or part. [Obsolescent.] 2. (pl.) Electric railroad-cars, or a street railroad operated electrically; as, the electrics run past the door. (2) An electromobile, or automobile whose motive power is electricity. (3) An electrical engineer. 3†. A substance capable of being electrified by friction.

e-lec'tri-cal, 1 r-lek'tri-kal; 2 e-lec'tri-cal, a. Of, pertaining to, or caused or produced by electricity; electric.

The term electrical was first applied by Sir Thomas Gilbert, to designate the attraction which amber . . . and other substances of its class exhibit when rubbed and presented to light bodies, such as bits of silk or paper. C. H. Haskins in Electricity in Daily Life, In the Service of Man p. 2. [s. 1891.]

— e-lec'tri-cal-ly, adv. By or as by means of electricity.

— e-lec'tri-cal-ness, n. [Rare.] The state or quality of being electrical.

e-lec'tri'cian, 1 r-lek-trish'an; 2 e-lec-trish'an, n. 1. One who is versed in the science of electricity; an original inventor of electrical devices, or one who invents, manufactures, furnishes, or has charge of electrical apparatus.

e-lec'tric-fi'-ty, 1 r-lek-tris'i-te; 2 e-lec-tris'i-te (xiii), n. 1. A resident agency which, when in motion, exhibits magnetic, chemical, and thermal effects, and which, whether in motion or at rest, is of such a nature that when it is present in two or more localities within certain limits of association, a force is developed by reaction between such localities is observed. Recent investigations indicate that it is discrete or granular in nature, and that there may be two kinds, positive and negative. Its effects differ according as it is at rest or in motion. At rest it is called static, is produced usually by friction (see ELECTRIC MACHINE), manifests itself chiefly in attraction and repulsion and violent discharges like that of lightning, does not produce currents, and has no use in the arts. See ELECTRIFICATION. In motion it is called dynamic or current electricity, and its form has been widely developed. See DYNAMO; ELECTROMAGNET. Some of the most useful properties of current electricity are: its power apparently to pass almost instantaneously through metallic conductors of great length; to magnetize iron and steel when conducted around the metal (iron temporarily and steel permanently); to generate an induced current in a neighboring circuit by its own variation; and to heat conductors of high resistance to incandescence.

At the beginning of the 20th century the term electricity had come to be regarded, in part at least, as a collective name for electrons, which in turn must be considered as constituents of the chemical atom, furthermore as centers of certain lines of self-locked and permanent strain existing in the universal aether or electromagnetic medium.
J. A. Fleming in Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. ix, p. 192.

2. Physics. That branch of science that treats of this agency and the phenomena caused by it. [< L. electrum; see ELECTRUM.

— animal electricity, electricity developed in a living animal, as markedly in the electric eel, torpedo, etc.— atmospheric e., electricity that is generated in the terrestrial atmosphere.— bound e., electricity so held by the attraction of neighboring electrified bodies that it does not escape to the earth when connected with it by a conductor: contradistinguished from free electricity.— cleavage e., electricity generated in crystalline substances by the operation of cleavage.— contact e., electricity resulting from the simple contact of two substances.— distribution of e., the carrying of electricity to a series of distant points, for commercial purposes.— Faradic e., electricity that passes in intermittent currents.— frictional e., that produced by friction; static electricity.— galvanic e., voltaic electricity.— latent e., bound electricity.— negative, positive, and resinous e., see ELECTRIFICATION.— terrestrial e., the electricity in the earth's mass, in contradistinction to that in the atmosphere.— vegetable e., that developed in growing plants.— vitreous e., positive electricity: disused.— voltaic e., electricity generated by chemical action. e-lec'tri-fi-ca'tion, 1 r-lek'tri-fi-kē'shon; 2 e-lec'ti-fi-ca'shon, n. The act or process of electrifying, or the state of being or becoming electrified.

A distinction formerly insisted upon was that between positive and negative electrification. It is a general rule that no substance can be electrified without some other substance also becoming electrified. Thus, when a body is electrified by friction, the rubbing body is also electrified. As two such bodies produce opposite effects, it was supposed that in the rubbing two "electric fluids" were separated, one vitreous and the other resinous. That pieces of glass and resin and similar materials was once called vitreous electricity, that on glass and other materials vitreous, these terms being used as equivalent to negative and positive respectively. This distinction, tho still in use, has ceased to be of great value, it being generally recognized that the difference between the two states is merely one of potential. See POTENTIAL. In current electricity, a current is conventionally one point to another, the first point is always said to be positive and the second negative.

e-lec'tri-fy, 1 r-lek'tri-fai; 2 e-lec'ti-fy, v. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] I. t. 1. To act upon or charge with electricity; pass an electric current through; as, to electrify the body.

Otto von Guericke [1602–1686] first observed that sparks and flashes of light could be obtained from highly electrified bodies at the moment when they were discharged.
S. P. Thompson Electricity and Magnetism p. 10. [MACM. 1889.]

2. To apply electricity to as a motive power; as, to electrify a railroad. 3. To arouse to sudden and intense interest; startle and excite; thrill; as, to electrify an audience. II. i. To become electrified, as a steel rod, glass readily electrifies. e-lec'tro-cy'a-nide, a. Pertaining to the combined use of electrolysis and cyanides.— electrocyanide process, a cyanide process in which electrolysis is employed to facilitate the solution of the gold.

e-lec'trode, 1 ı-lek'trōd; 2 ē-lĕc'trōd, n. Either of the poles of a galvanic battery or dynamo, or one of two pieces of metal so connected with the poles that, when joined by a conductor, the electric current passes between them; an anode or a cathode. [< ELECTRO- + Gr. hodos, way.] — brush electrode, an electrode in the form of a wire brush; used for curative purposes.— calomel e. (Chem.), an electrode of metallic mercury, possessing reversible and non-polarizing properties, covered with mercurous chlorid and the solution of some other metal, as zinc. In this type of electrode currents in either direction are under similar conditions, with the result that the electromotive force is constant.— carbon e. (Electrochem. ap.), the electrode used to complete the circuit.— reversible or non-polarizable e. (Physics), an electrode in which electrolytic action does not produce a back or reverse current, as a metallic plate standing in a solution of a salt of the metal on which a current passing from the solution to the plate simply deposits part of the metal in the solution.— e-lec'trode-less, a. Independent of an electrode; specif., designating a discharge produced in a rarefied gas by an adjacent oscillating magnetic field.

e-lec'tro-de-pos'it, n. That which is chemically by an electric current.— e-lec'tro-de-pos'it, n. That which is deposited by an electric current.— e-lec'tro-dep''o-si'tion, n. The process of electrodeposition.— e-lec'tro-dep'o-tor, n.— e-lec'tro-di'ag-no'sis, n. Therap. The process of determining disease in different parts of the body by the effect of an electric current on nerves or muscles.

e-lec'tro-dy-nam'ics, 1 ı-lek'tro-dai-nam'ĭks; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-dī-năm'ĭcs, n. The branch of physics that treats of electric currents, especially of induction as manifested by them.— e-lec'tro-dy'na-mism, n. See INDUCTION, 6.— e-lec'tro-dy-nam'ic, a. Relating to electrodynamics; relating to forces of attraction or repulsion produced by electric currents.— e-lec'tro-dy-nam'i-cal-ly, adv.

e-lec'tro-dy'na-mom'e-ter, 1 ı-lek'tro-dai'na-mom'ĭ-tar; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-dī'na-mŏm'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the strength of an electric current, as by the interaction of two wire coils. [< ELECTRODYNAMIC + -METER.] — e-lec'tro-dy'na-mo-met'ric, a.

e-lec'tro-en'do-scope, n. Med. An instrument for examining the interior of organs by electric light.— e-lec'tro-en'graved', a. To produce, as pictures or designs, on metal or glass, by means of a graver operated by a current electrically instead of by acids. e-lec'tro-etch'‡.— e-lec'tro-en'graving, n. The act or process of completing an etching or in an electrotype. 2. The print or an impression taken from a plate so made. e-lec'tro-etch'ing‡.— e-lec'tro-e-the're-al, a. Of or relating to the ether, regarded as the medium of electric phenomena.— electro-ethereal theory of light, a theory according to which energy in the form of ether-waves is radiated from the electrons in source of light which is derived by collision with surrounding atoms.— e-lec'tro-ex-am'i-na'tion, n. Production by electricity; specif., production of remedial effects by the application of an electric current to the nervous system.— e-lec'tro-fac'ny, n. Same as ELECTROFACTURE.— e-lec'tro-fac'ture, n. Electrogenesis.— e-lec'tro-ge-ne'tic, a.— e-lec'tro-gild, tr. To electroplate with gold.— e-lec'tro-gild'er, n.— e-lec'tro-gra-phom'e-ter, n. Elec. An instrument for measuring phase displacement between electromotive forces and currents in an alternating-current circuit.— e-lec'tro-gram, n. A chart or diagram showing a continuous record of the amount of electricity in the atmosphere at a fixed point.

e-lec'tro-graph, 1 ı-lek'tro-graf; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-grăf, n. 1. The linear record of an electromotor. 2. An apparatus for tracing a design to be electro-etched for use in printing wall-paper, calico, etc. 3. A telautograph. 4. An X-ray skiagraph. 5. A bioscope employing the arc light. [< ELECTRO- + -GRAPH.] — e-lec'tro-graph'ic, a.

e-lec'tro-phy, 1 ı-lek'tro-graf'ə-fi; 2 ē-lĕc'trŏg'ra-fy, n. 1. Galvanography. 2. The reproduction of an engraving or copperplate by electrodeposition as distinguished from electroplating. 3. The use of an electrograph. [< ELECTRO- + -GRAPHY.]

e-lec'tro-har-mon'ic, a. Relating to a system of telegraphic signaling through reeds vibrating in accordance with a prearranged pitch. See MULTIPLE HARMONIC TELEGRAPH, under TELEGRAPH.— e-lec'tro-he-mos'ta-sis, n. Med. The stoppage of any form of hemorrhage or bleeding by galvanocautery.— e-lec''tro-in-dus'tri-al, a. Pertaining to the industrial use of electricity.— e-lec''tro-ir''ri-ga'tion, n. Irrigation in which the water is pumped by electricity.

e-lec''tro-ki-net'ic, 1 ı-lek'tro-ki-net'ik; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-kĭ-nĕt'ĭc, a. Pertaining to or caused by electricity in motion.

e-lec''tro-ki-net'ics, 1 ı-lek'tro-ki-net'ĭks; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-kĭ-nĕt'ĭcs, n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the motion of electricity and the forces producing or regulating it: opposed to electrostatics.

e-lec'tro-lier', 1 ı-lek'tro-lir'; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-lēr', n. A fixture for holding electric lamps. The word is analogous to chandelier, but is not a good form.

e-lec'tro-lin-thot'ri-ty, n. The destruction of a calculus in the bladder by electrolysis.— e-lec'trol'o-gy, n. [Rare.] That branch of physical science which treats of the phenomena and properties of electricity.— e-lec''tro-log'ic, e-lec''tro-log'i-cal, a.— e-lec'trol'o-gist, n.— e-lec'tro-lu''mi-nes'cence, n. Luminescence produced by electric excitation, as the glow of certain gases in vacuo.— e-lec''tro-lu''mi-nes'cent, a.

e-lec-trol'y-sis, 1 ı-lek-trol'ı-sis; 2 ē-lĕc-trŏl'y-sĭs, n. 1. The process of decomposing a chemical compound by the passage of an electric current through it. 2. Decomposition so effected.

Electrolysis has been applied to the rectification of alcohols, the improvement of wines, and the deposition of aniline dyes.

e-lec'tro-lyte, 1 ı-lek'tro-lait; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-līt, n. A chemical compound which can be decomposed by the passage of a current. See ION. [< ELECTRO- + Gr. lytos, vb. n. of lyō, loose.]

e-lec'tro-lyt'ic, 1 ı-lek'tro-lit'ik; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-lĭt'ĭc, a. Relating to or of the nature of electrolysis or an electrolyte. e-lec'tro-lyt'i-cal‡.— electrolytic gas (Chem.), an explosive mixture of oxygen and hydrogen, in the proportion of one to two, liberated in the electrolysis of oxychlorid in alkaline solution. The volume generated in a unit of time may be used to measure the strength of the electric current.— e. interrupter, a device for closing and opening a circuit automatically by the gradual adaptation of an electrolyte.— e. refining, the refining of metals by electrolysis.— e. slime (Metal.), the finely divided mud or slime left undissolved in the electrolyte refining. In refining copper or lead it contains the gold and silver in these metals, which are thus separated and obtained.— e-lec''tro-ly'ti-cal-ly, adv.

e-lec'tro-mag'net, 1 ı-lek'tro-mag'net; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-măg'nĕt, n. A core of magnetizable substance, as soft iron, which is magnetized by the passage of an electric current through a coil of wire around it, and ceases to be a magnet when the current stops. It forms the essential feature of practically all electrodynamic apparatus.

e-lec'tro-mag-net'ic, 1 ı-lek'tro-mag-net'ik; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-măg-nĕt'ĭc, a. Pertaining to magneto-electricity.— electromagnetic or electrodynamic system of units, the system of units in which the solenoid, see SOLENOID.— e. unit, any unit in electric measurement based on the effect of a current of electricity in producing magnetic force: distinguished from electrostatic unit. See AMPERE; COULOMB; Electromagnet lifting iron; FARAD; OHM; VOLT.— e. wave, the same as ELECTRIC WAVE. -i-cal‡.— -i-cal-ly, adv.

e-lec'tro-mag-net'ics, 1 ı-lek'tro-mag-net'ĭks; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-măg-nĕt'ĭcs, n. Physics. The science of the laws and principles of electromagnetism.

e-lec'tro-mag'net-ism, 1 ı-lec'tro-mag'net-izm; 2 ē-lĕc'tro-măg'nĕt-ĭsm, n. Physics. 1. Magnetism developed by electricity. 2. That branch of physics which treats of the relations between electricity and magnetism and of the phenomena due to these relations.— e-lec''tro-mag'net-ist, n. One versed in electromagnetism.

e-lec'tro-mas'sage, n. The kneading and rubbing of the flesh of muscles, with the application of an electric current.— e-lec'tro-med'i-cal, a. Pertaining to the use of electricity as a medicinal agent.— e-lec''tro-met'al-lur'gy, n. The art or science of electrolytically depositing metals, or of separating them from their ores or alloys by electrolysis.— e-lec'tro-met''al-lur'gi-cal, a.— e-lec''tro-met'al-lur''gist, n.

e-lec'tro-me'ter, 1 ı-lek-trom'ı-tar; 2 ē-lĕc-trŏm'e-ter, n. 1. An instrument for measuring electric potential or the difference of such potential between two points. 2. Improperly, an electroscope.— e-lec'tro-met'ric, a.— -ri-cal, a. -ri-cal-ly, adv. absolute electrometer, an electrometer in which electrification is measured by the mutual attraction of two disks.— capillary e., an electrometer for measuring changes in electrical potential by means of a mercury column rising from a glass vessel containing mercury at the bottom and dilute acid above it, the top. Differences of potential occurring between platinum terminals are indicated by the mercury tube and the glass vessel vary the surface tension of the column of mercury, which accordingly rises or falls. A difference of 1009 volt can be detected in this manner.— Dolazalek e., a sensitive quadrant electrometer having a light needle of silvered paper suspended by a quartz fiber; used especially in investigations on radio-activity.— Ebert e., a device for measuring the charge of electrons in the air, especially during a balloon ascension, by aspiration of the air through the space between two metallic cylinders.— gold-leaf e., one that has two parallel strips of gold-leaf which are caused to diverge by presentation of an electrified conductor; and rejoin on its withdrawal. gold-leaf electroscope‡.— Lane's e. (Elec.), an apparatus for measuring the static electric charge in a jar or battery, consisting of a standard jar and a discharging-rod separated therefrom by a measured distance. When the standard jar is connected with the battery, the charge of the latter is determined by the number of discharges across the measured gap.— quadrant e., one that measures an electrostatic charge by the attractive force of quadrants of metal on a light aluminum needle.— electrometer-tube, etc. e-lec'tro-met'ri-cal, a.— e-lec-trom'e-try, n.

e-lec'tro-mo'bile, 1 ı-lek'tro-mo'bil; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-mō'bĭl, n. An automobile using electricity as a motive power.— e-lec'tro-bat‡.

e-lec'tro-mo''tion, 1 ı-lek'tro-mō'shan; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-mō'shŭn, n. 1. The passage of an electric current in a voltaic circuit. 2. Mech. Motion produced by electricity employed as power.

e-lec'tro-mo''tive, 1 ı-lek'tro-mō'tiv; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-mō'tĭv, a. Of or pertaining to the motion of electricity or the laws that govern it; as, electromotive force.— back electromotive force, same as COUNTERELECTROMOTIVE FORCE.— contact e. force (Elec.), one set up as the result of contact between dissimilar metals.— e. force, the force that causes electricity to move along a conductor (commonly abbreviated in scientific works to E. M. F.).— e. series, an arrangement of the metals in series, in which each metal precipitates out of solution the metals following it, and is itself precipitated by those that precede it. The order differs for different solutions, as metallic chlorids, cyanids, etc., and also for the same salts, for different media, in which they are dissolved, as water, alcohol, formaldehyde, etc.— energy e. force (Elec.), that component of an electromotive force which is in phase with the current in the circuit.— impressed e. force (Elec.), the electromotive force acting on any circuit to produce a current thereon independently of any opposing electromotive force.

e-lec'tro-mo''tive, n. An electric locomotive.

e-lec'tro-mo'to-graph, 1 ı-lek'tro-mō'to-graf; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-mō'tō-grăf, n. An instrument for measuring the pitch of a platinum point against a rotating cylinder of moist chalk is reduced by electrolytic action at the points of contact on the passage of an electric current: used as a substitute for an electromagnet in some apparatus, and in a form of telephone.

e-lec'tro-mo''tor, 1 ı-lek'tro-mō'tar or -ter; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-mō'tor, n. 1. A motive machine that transforms electrical into mechanical energy: the opposite of a dynamo, or dynamo-electric generator. 2. Any electric source, as a voltaic cell or a thermo-electric pile.

e-lec'tro-mus'cu-lar, a. Pertaining to the effect of electricity upon the muscles; as, electromuscular phenomena.

e-lec'tron, 1 ı-lek'tron; 2 ē-lĕc'trŏn, n. 1. Physics. The smallest known component of matter: always associated with an unvarying quantity of negative electricity. It is supposed by some that the chemical atoms consist of collections of electrons having orbital motions in a sphere of positive electrification. All atomic characteristics are satisfactorily explained on this basis. It is held by others to be a localized strain in the ether. Compare note under ELECTRICITY, 1. 2. Same as ELECTRUM.— electron or electronic theory, the theory that the chemical atom is not the smallest possible part of an element, but is composed of electrons describing orbital and vibratory motions.— e-lec'tron-ic(s), n. A plan for separating the plus and minus electrons, by noting their varying velocities.— e-lec'tron'ic, a.

e-lec'tro-neg'a-tiv(ə), 1 ı-lek'tro-neg'a-tiv; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-nĕg'a-tĭv. I. a. 1. Appearing, as an element in electrolysis, at the positive electrode. 2. Having the property of becoming negatively electrified by contact with or the chemical action of another substance. II. n. An electronegative element.— e-lec'tro-neg'a-tiv'i-ty, n.

e-lec'tro-nome, n. An electrometer.— e-lec'tro-op'tic, a. Relating to electro-optics. e-lec'tro-op'ti-cal‡.— e-lec''tro-op'ti-cal-ly, adv.— electro-optics, n. [Sing.] The branch of physics that treats of the mutual action between electricity or magnetism and rays of light.— e-lec'tro-os'mose, n. Same as ELECTRIC OSMOSE. See under OSMOSE.— e-lec''tro-os-mot'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, caused by, or showing electric osmose.

e-lec'tro-path, 1 ı-lek'tro-path; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-păth, n. [Colloq.] One practitioner of electropathy.

e-lec'tro-pa-thol'o-gy, 1 ı-lek'tro-pa-thel'o-j‡; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-pa-thŏl'o-gy, n. The science of morbid conditions as revealed by electrical means.

e-lec'tro-pa'thy, 1 ı-lek'tro-pe'a-thı; 2 ē-lĕc'trŏp'a-thy, n. The treatment of disease by means of electricity; electrotherapeutics. [< ELECTRO- + -PATHY.] — e-lec'tro-path'ic, a.

e-lec'tro-phone, n. A form of telephonic transmitter: so named by its French inventor, and supposed at the time to be especially adapted for the transmission of speech through long submarine cables.— e-lec''tro-pho-tom'e-ter, n. A photometer for comparing the brightness of any light with that of an electric spark.— e-lec'tro-pho''to-mi-crog'ra-phy, n. The science and art of photographing, by electric light, objects enlarged by a microscope.

e-lec-troph'o-rus, 1 ı-lek-trof'o-rus; 2 ē-lĕc-trŏf'o-rus, n. [-RI, 1 -rai; 2 -rī, pl.] 1. An instrument for generating static electricity by induction; electrode. It is commonly made of a disk of hard rubber, to which may be applied another of wood coated with tin-foil. e-lec'tro-phore‡. 2. [E-] Ich. A genus typical of Electrophoridæ. [< ELECTRO + Gr. phoros, bear.]

e-lec''tro-pho'to-ther-a-py, n. The employment of the electric light for therapeutic purposes.— e-lec'tro-phys'ics, n. Same as ELECTROLOGY.— e-lec''tro-phys''i-o-log'i-cal, a. Of or pertaining to electric currents in, or produced by, living organisms: said of a physiological action.— e-lec''tro-phys''i-ol'o-gy, n. The study of the electric phenomena of living organisms.— e-lec''tro-phys''i-o'lo-gist, n.

e-lec'tro-plate, 1 ı-lek'tro-plet; 2 ē-lĕc'trō-plāt, tr. To coat with metal by electrodeposition. The object to be plated is placed in a solution of a salt of the metal in connection with the negative pole of a battery or dynamo. The salt is decomposed by the current and the metallic constituent deposited on the negative pole and its connected object. A piece of the metal, attached to the positive pole in the solution, dissolves, and keeps up the strength of the solution.— e-lec'tro-plat''er, n. One whose occupation is electroplating.— e-lec'tro-plat''ing, n. 1. The act or process of depositing metal by electric means. See illus. under NICKELPLATING. 2. The coat of metal deposited by this process.

e-lec'tro-plate, n. An object that has been electroplated, or such articles collectively.

e-lec'tro-pneu-mat'ic, 1 i-lek'tro-niu-mat'ik; 2 ē-lēk'tro-nū-mät'ic, a. Pertaining to or operated by electrically compressed air. — electropneumatic action (Organ-building), the operation of the machinery of an organ by compressed air regulated by electricity.

e-lec'tro-po'ĺon, 1 i-lek'tro-po'ĺon; 2 ē-lēk'tro-pō'ĺon, n. An exciant liquid for an electric battery, composed of potassium dichromate, sulfuric acid, and water. — e-lec'tro-po'lar, a. Having a difference of electric potential at two ends: said of a cylindrical conductor.

e-lec'tro-pos'i-tiv(es), 1 i-lek'tro-poz'i-tiv; 2 ē-lēk'tro-pŏs'i-tiv. I. a. 1. Appearing at the negative electrode: said of an element in electrolysis. 2. Having the property of becoming positively electrified by contact or chemical action. II. n. An electropositive element.

e-lec'tro-prog-no'sis, 1 i-lek'tro-pro-gə-nō'sis; 2 ē-lēk'tro-prŏg-nō'sis, n. The prognosis of a disease derived from the character of the reactions of nerves or muscles to the electric current. — e-lec'tro-pune'tur-a'tion, n. Med. The therapeutical application of electrolysis to the treatment of aneurisms or any diseased growths; galvanopuncture. A fine platinum needle connected with the anode of a battery is introduced into the system, a moist sponge uniting the other end of the growth with the cathode, or two such needles are inserted, each connected with one of the opposite poles of the battery. — e-lec'tro-pune'ture; e-lec'tro-pune'tur-ing†, — e-lec'tro-py-rom'e-ter, n. A pyrometer in which electricity is employed. — e-lec'tro-re-cep'tive, a. Utilizing an electric current: said of such devices as a telegraph, an electric motor, or an electric lamp. — e-lec'tro-re-fine', tr. To purify or refine (metals or other similar substances) by the employment of electrolysis. — e-lec'tro-re-fin'ing, n. Refinement by electrolysis. In this process the anode, consisting of a plate of the metal in its crude state, is suspended in an electrolyte consisting of one of its salts, and when current flows through the circuit the crude metal dissolves from the anode and is deposited in a pure state on the cathode. — e-lec'tro-rep'lica, n. A duplicate produced by electrotyping.

e-lec'tro-scope, 1 i-lek'tro-skōp; 2 ē-lēk'tro-scōp, n. An instrument for detecting the presence of electricity upon a conductor by the repulsion of pith-balls or strips of gold-leaf. [< ELECTRO- + -SCOPE.] — condensing electroscope, a form of electroscope in which greater sensibility is obtained for the use of a condenser.— lantern e., an electroscope so arranged that its operation may be observed by an audience by means of its images as projected upon a screen by a lantern.— radium e., an electroscope in which the charge is lost by which is regularly recharged, by the action of radium.— e-lec'tro-scop'ic, a. Pertaining to or accomplished by the electroscope.

h, insulated handle for removing upper plate; l, gold-leaf; p, metallic poles connecting with an electric source.

e-lec'tro-stat'ic, 1 i-lek'tro-stat'ik; 2 ē-lēk'tro-stăt'ic, a. Pertaining to electrostatics; produced by electricity at rest, as: electrostatic induction. — l-calf.—electrostatic measure, measure based upon the attractive or repulsive power of static electricity.— e. stress, the stress produced upon a transparent medium in an electrostatic field of force by means of which such medium acquires double refracting or polarizing properties in its action upon light. See MAXWELL'S LAW, and, in any unit of electrical measurement based on the attraction or repulsion of a static charge: distinguished from electromagnetic unit. — e-lec'tro-stat'i-cal-ly, adv.

e-lec'tro-stat'ics, 1 i-lek'tro-stat'iks; 2 ē-lēk'tro-stăt'ics, n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the phenomena of electricity at rest or of frictional electricity: opposed to electrokinetics.

e-lec'tro-ste-nol'y-sis, 1 i-lek'tro-stə-nol'i-sis; 2 ē-lēk'tro-stē-nŏl'y-sĭs, n. The precipitation of certain metals from a solution through which an electric current is passing. — e-lec'tro-sten'o-lyt'ic, a. — e-lec'tro-ste'no-type, n. Same as ELECTROTYPE. — e-lec'tro-stric'tion, n. A deformation caused by electrical stress. — e-lec'tro-sur'ger-y, n. The application of electricity to surgery.— e-lec'tro-sur'gi-cal, a. Pertaining to the employment of electricity in surgical operations.— e-lec'tro-syn'the-sis, n. Chem. Synthesis produced by means of electricity.

e-lec'tro-tax'is, 1 i-lek'tro-tak'sis; 2 ē-lēk'tro-tăk'sĭs, n. Biol. That property of protoplasm which makes it susceptible to the influence of an electric stimulus, as shown by the direction of movement also, any similar property in simple organisms. It has been observed in the tadpoles of frogs and tubers of the normal life, also in certain plant organs. In relation to plants it is more generally known as electrotropism. [< ELECTRO- + Gr. taxis, arrange.] — e-lec'tro-tech'nic, 1 i-lek'tro-tek'nik; 2 ē-lēk'tro-tĕk'nic, n. The science of the methods, processes, and operations in which electricity is applied in the industrial arts. — e-lec'tro-tech-nol'o-gy†. — e-lec'tro-tech'nic, e-lec'tro-tech'ni-cal, a.

e-lec'tro-tel'e-ther-mom'e-ter, 1 i-lek'tro-tel'i-thər-mom'i-tər; 2 ē-lēk'tro-tēl'e-ther-mŏm'e-tər, n. An apparatus for giving warning of a rise in temperature at some spot remote from the observer, consisting of a mercury thermometer with platinum wires sealed into the bulb in such a way as to close an electric indicator circuit when the mercury rises to a given point.— e-lec'tro-tel-lu'ro-graph, n. An instrument for studying electrical disturbances in the earth.

e-lec'tro-ther'a-peu'tic-al, 1 i-lek'tro-ther'ə-pi-ū'tik-əl; 2 ē-lēk'tro-thĕr'a-pū'tic, a. Pertaining to electrotherapeutics.

e-lec'tro-ther'a-peu'tics, 1 i-lek'tro-ther'ə-pi-ū'tiks; 2 ē-lēk'tro-thĕr'a-pū'tics, n. 1. The treatment of diseases by electricity; opposed to thermoelectrics. 2. The laws, principles, and doctrines of such treatment; electropathy. — e-lec'tro-ther'a-pyt. — e-lec'tro-ther'a-peu'tic, -tĭ-cal, a. — -tist, n.

e-lec'tro-ther'a-pist, 1 i-lek'tro-ther'ə-pist; 2 ē-lēk'tro-thĕr'a-pist, n. Same as ELECTROTHERAPEUTIST.

e-lec'tro-ther'mal, 1 i-lek'tro-thûr'məl; 2 ē-lēk'tro-thĕr'mal, a. 1. Combining heat and electricity; as, an electrothermal bath. 2. Physics. Relating to the generation of heat by electricity: opposed to thermoelectrics. — e-lec'tro-ther'man-cy, n. The science of the effects of electric currents upon the temperature of metallic conductors or circuits. — e-lec'tro-ther'mom'e-ter, n. A thermometer in which electricity is used as a means of indicating the exact amount of heat present.— e-lec'tro-ther'mo-met'ric, a. Pertaining to electrically generated heat. — e-lec'tro-thĕr'mo-met'rics, n. An electro-engraved relief plate, especially one for printing in colors. 2. A print from such a plate.— e-lec'tro-tint'ing, n. The art of printing in colors from plates produced. — e-lec'tro-tome, n. A device, usually automatic, for breaking an electric circuit.— e-lec'tro-ton'ic, a. 1. Of or relating to electrotonus. 2. Of or relating to or caused by electrotonus.— e-lec-trot'o-nize, tr. To alter the normal action of by electricity, as a muscle.— e-lec-trot'o-nus, n. Of or relating to electric tension. 2. Of, caused by, or relating to electrotonus.— e-lec-trot'o-nus, n. The change in the activity of a nerve or muscle induced by a voltaic current. See ANELECTROTONUS; CATELECTROTONUS. — e-lec'tro-tone'; e-lec'tro-to-nic'i-ty†. — physical electrotonus, the electrical change taking place in a wire or other conductor during the passage of a current.— physiological electrotonus, the stimulation and depression of the sensitivity of a nerve produced respectively by the positive and negative electrodes from a source of electric current. — e-lec'tro-tro'pism, n. Bot. Same as ELECTROTAXIS.— e-lec'tro-trop'ic, a.

e-lec'tro-type, 1 i-lek'tro-taip; 2 ē-lēk'tro-tīp, n. [-TYPED; -TYP'ING.] To make an electrotype of; duplicate by electrotyping.

e-lec'tro-type, n. 1. A metallic copy (usually having a copper face) of any surface, as of a coin, made by electrodeposition, especially one of a woodcut, page of type, or the like, for printing. 2. An impression from an electrotyped cut. 3. The process of electrotyping; electrotypy. [< ELECTRO- + TYPE.] — electrotype shell, the thin reproduction, usually in copper, of an engraving, or the like, in the wax process, before being filled or backed with electrotype-metal.— e-lec'tro-typ'er, n. 1. One who electrotypes. 2. [Obs.] The bath holding the electrotyping solution. — e-lec'tro-typ'ist; — e-lec'tro-typ'ic, a. Pertaining to or made by electrotyping.— e-lec'tro-typ'ing, n. The act, process, or business of forming electrotypes. See ELECTROTYPE, n. — e-lec'tro-typ'y, n. The process or art of electrotyping.

e-lec'tro-ty'po-graph, 1 i-lek'tro-tai'po-graf; 2 ē-lēk'tro-tī'- Electrotyping-machinery.

Wax is heated in the wax-kettle and poured in a thin layer on the stretched table, a, and introduced into the hydraulic moulding-press, b, to receive the impression in form. The matrix thus made, after the necessary touching up, is passed to the blacklead-ing-machine, c, and receives a thorough coat of plumbago. When this matrix is suspended in the bath, d, which contains plates of copper suspended in a solution of sulfate of the same metal, a shell of the copper is deposited on the mold by the electrical action. This shell is washed and cleared of the wax, and taken to the furnace, e, where a coat of tin-foil is melted on to the back. The shell is then laid face downward in one of the pans on the backing-stand, f, and molten silver-type-metal is poured on to the thickness of an inch or more. When cooled and trimmed up in the planer and shaver, g, and saw and trimmer, h, and properly mounted and made type-high, the plate thus made is ready for printing.

e-lec'tro-ty'pot, 1 i-lek'tro-tai'pot; 2 ē-lēk'tro-tī'pŏt, n. A typograph operated by electricity.— e-lec'tro-vec'tion, n. Electric osmose.— e-lec'tro-vi'tal, a. Electric and originating in vital processes. — e-lec'tro-vi'tal-ism, n. Physiol. The theory of neuro-electric action.

e-lec'tro-zone, 1 i-lek'tro-zōn; 2 ē-lēc'tro-zōn, n. An antiseptic solution of common salt prepared by treatment with the electric current, resulting in the formation of a certain amount of sodium hypochlorite. Suggested as a means to secure sanitation.

e-lec'trum, 1 i-lek'trum; 2 ē-lēc'trŭm, n. 1. German silver. 2. Class. Antiq. (1) Amber. (2) Orichalc. e-lec'tron‡. 3. (1) Native gold containing a large percentage of silver. (2) An alloy of four parts gold and one part silver. 4‡. Bronze. 5‡. Gold-dust. [L., < Gr. ēlektron, amber.]

E-lec'try-on, 1 i-lek'tri-on; 2 ē-lēc'try-ŏn, n. Son of Perseus and Andromeda.

e-lec'tu-a-ry, 1 i-lek'tiu-[or -tiu-]ē-ri; 2 ē-lēc'tu-[or -tū-]ā-ry, n. [-RIES, l.-RIZ: 2 -rĭs, pl.] Pharm. A confection made by incorporating a medicinal substance with some sweet substance, as sirup or honey. [< OF. lettuaire, < LL. electuarium, < Gr. ekleikton, < ek, out, + leichō, lick.] — e-lec'tu-a-ry-pot", n. A receptacle of earthenware or other material for holding an electuary.

el"e-do'ne, 1 el'i-dō'ni; 2 ĕl'e-dō'nē, n. An octopodoid cuttlefish (genus Eledone) with single rows of suckers. [< Gr. eledonē, polypus.]

el"e-e-mos'y-na-ry, 1 el'i-i-mes'i-nē-ri; 2 ĕl'e-e-mŏs'y-nā-ry (XIII), a. 1. Of or pertaining to charity or alms; existing for the relief of the poor; charitable; gratuitous; as, eleemosynary institutions; eleemosynary purposes; eleemosynary gifts. 2. Aided by or dependent upon charity; as, the eleemosynary classes. [< LL. eleemosynarius, < eleemosyna, < Gr. eleēmosynē; see ALMS.]

el"e-e-mos'y-na-ry, n. [-RIES, pl.] A beneficiary or recipient of charitable gifts.— el"e-e-mos'y-na-ri-ly, adv. By way of almsgiving, or in charity.— el"e-e-mos'y-na-ri-ness, n. The character or quality of being eleemosynary.

el'ef, n. Same as ALEPH.

el'e-gance, 1 el'i-gəns; 2 ĕl'e-găns, n. 1. The state or quality of being elegant; choice or delicate structure, form, or action; beauty resulting from a combination of fine qualities; gracefulness; polish; refinement; as, elegance of proportion, motion, style, or manner.

The Arabians . . . have as the style and language, the standard of elegance in the Arab tongue. PRIDEAUX Mahomet (n. 29. ISA. 1850.)

2. Anything elegant; an elegancy. [OF., < L. elegantia, < elegans, side form of elegens, ppr. of eligo; see ELECT, v.] SYN.: see POLITENESS.

el'e-gan-cy, 1 el'i-gən-si; 2 ĕl'e-găn-cy, n. [-CIES, l. -SIZ: 2 -cĭs, pl.] That which is elegant or the parts elegance; also, elegance or choice structure, or an instance of it.

A clear and sharp-cut enunciation is one of the . . . elegancies of speech. Edinburgh Review (Papers second series, intro.

el'e-gant, 1 el'i-gənt; 2 ĕl'e-gănt, a. 1. Marked by refinement, grace, or symmetry; exhibiting faultless taste and delicacy of finish; polished; refined; as, an elegant apartment. 2. Possessing a fine sense of beauty, purity, or fitness.

Among the English clergy we find profound and elegant scholars. CHANNING Works, Fenelon p. 360. (a. v. s. 1853.)

3. [Colloq.] Marked by considerable ease and dexterity; appropriate; as, an elegant argument. 4. [Colloq.] Worthy of high praise; excellent; capital. [OF., < L. elegant(i-a); see ELEGANCE.]

SYN.: dainty, exquisite. Elegant (Latin elegans, select) refers to that assemblage of qualities which makes anything choice to persons of culture and refinement: it refers to the lighter, finer elements of beauty in form or action, and is often misused as a general term of approval. A dress may be elegant, but such expressions as "an elegant field of corn," "an elegant ride," or "an elegant time" are colloquialisms and vulgarieties. Exquisite denotes the utmost perfection of the elegant in minute details; we speak of an elegant garment, an exquisite lace. Exquisite is also applied to intense keenness of any feeling; as, exquisite delight; exquisite pain. See BEAUTIFUL; CHOICE; DAINTY; FINE; POLITE.— el'e-gant-ly, adv.

e-le'gi-ac, 1 i-lī'ji-ak or el'i-jai'ak; 2 ē-lē'jī-ăc or ĕl'e-ĝī'ăc (XIII), a. 1. Of the nature of an elegy, or mournful poem; hence, sad or plaintive; as, an elegiac style. 2.

Pros. Following the meter used by the Greeks and Latins in their elegies, viz., a dactylic hexameter followed by a dactylic pentameter; as, an elegiac distich. See example below.

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column.
In the pentameter aye falling in melodv back.
COLERIDGE The Oxidian Elegiac Metre.

e-le'gi-ac, n. 1. A poet who writes in the line or in the meter of the elegy. 2. pl. Verse composed in the elegiac spirit or form, as,

Love-blowing breezes are roaming
the broad valley dimm'd in the gloaming.
Thro' the black-stemm'd pines only the far river shines.
TENNYSON Lucretius Elegiacs.

[< LL. elegiacus, < Gr. elegeiakos, < elegeia; see ELEGY.]

el"e-gi-an'thus, 1 el'i-ji-an'-bus; 2 el'e-ĝī-ăn'thŭs, n. [-BI, 1 -bai; 2 -bī, pl.] A verse of which the first half is a dactylic pentheminieris, the second an iambic dimeter. [— ⏑ — ⏑ — ⏑ — ⏑ — | — ⏑ — ⏑ — ⏑ — ⏑ —] [LL., < L. elegia (see ELEGY) and Gr. anthos, flower.]

— el"e-gi-ast'ic. a. Of or pertaining to an elegiambus; as, an elegiambic line. II. n. An elegiambus.

e-le'gi-ans, 1 i-lī'ji-ənz; 2 ē-lē'ĝī-ăns, n. pl. Elegiac verses.

el'e-gist, 1 el'i-jist; 2 ĕl'e-ĝĭst, n. One who writes elegies. e-le'gi-ast'; el"e-gi-og'ra-pher†.

el'e-gize, 1 el'i-jaiz; 2 ĕl'e-ĝīz, v. [-GIZED; -GIZ'ING.] I. t. To compose an elegy on; lament. II. i. To write in elegiac verse or style; mourn.

el'e-gy, 1 el'i-ji; 2 ĕl'e-ĝy, n. [-GIES, 1 -jiz; 2 -ĝis, pl.] 1. A classical poem in elegiac verse; hence, a lyric poem lamenting the dead; a funeral song, as Shelley's Adonais.

2. A reflective and meditative poem with sorrowful theme; solemn or plaintive poetry; as, Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard." 3. Mus. A mournful or melancholy piece of music; a dirge. [< OF. elegie, < L. elegia, < Gr. elegeia, < elegos, mourning song.]

e-le'i-din, 1 ı-lē'ı-din, n. A substance constituting the elliptical granules found in the stratum granulosum of the epidermis. [< Gr. elaia, olive-oil.]

E-lek'tra, n. Same as ELECTRA. See OPERA.

El''e-lē'he-is'tn-el, 1 el''e-lē'he-ĭs'tn-el; 2 el''ē-lē'he-ĭs'tn-el; 3 el''ē-lē'he-ĭs'tn-el, n. Bib. Gen. xxxiii, 20.

el'e-me, 1 el'ı-mi; 2 ē'e-me, a. [Turk.] Carefully sifted; hand-picked; of superior quality; as, eleme figs. el'e-mi.

el'e-ment, 1 el'ı-ment or -mənt; 2 ē'e-ment, n. 1. A component, fundamental, or essential part; especially, a relatively simple part of anything structurally complex; a constituent; ingredient; as, distinct enunciation is an element of good reading; cheerfulness is an element of a happy disposition; a piston is an element of a steam-engine; a letter is an element of a written word. 2. pl. (1) First principles; the simplest, basic, fundamental ideas; rudiments; as, the elements of arithmetic. (2) Astron. The six quantities which determine the orbit of a planet and its motion in the ecliptic; data for any problem. (3) The materials of the world; as, the final destruction of the elements. (4) The bread and wine of the Lord's Supper; as, the consecrated elements. 3. Theos. One of the invisible basic substances out of which the elements, or so-called simple bodies in chemistry, are formed and existing in physical and superphysical matter. Sometimes, elementum.

The elements, as the mothers of all creatures, are of an invisible spiritual nature, and have souls.

FRANZ HARTMANN Paracelsus p. 43. [c. n. 1887.]

4. Philos. One of the simple substances or elementary principles out of which the complex existences of the world, as now known, are supposed to be constituted. In the early Greek philosophy, one or more of the four substances — earth, air, water, and fire — which were supposed to be the elements of all things. To these four Aristotle adds a fifth, which he called ether, and considered that the heavenly spheres were compounds of it. Compare PRINCIPLE.

TABLE OF CHEMICAL ELEMENTS.—Atomic Weights revised by FRANK WIGGLESWORTH CLARKE, chief chemist of the United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

Mer'cu-ry (hydrargyrum)..... Planet Mercury	Hg	200.0	13.596†	−38.9	I. or II.	.....	Prehistoric	Native, and in cinnabar (HgS)
Ra'di-um..... L. radius, ray	Ra	226.4	.....	.....	II.	1898	Mme. and M. Curie and Bémont	In pitchblende
Bo'ron..... Eng. borax	B	11.0	2.5	Infusible	III.	1808	Davy	In borax and other minerals
A-lu'mi-num..... L. alumen, alum	Al	27.1	2.58	658	III.	1828	Wöhler	In many rocks. (The most abundant metal.)
Scan'di-um..... Scandinavia	Sc	44.1	.....	.....	III.	1879	Nilson	In gadolinite and other rare minerals
Gal'li-um..... L. Gallia, France	Ga	69.9	5.95	30	III.	1875	Boisbaudran	In certain zinc-blendes
Yt'tri-um..... Ytterby, a town in Sweden	Yt	89.0	3.8	.....	III.	1828	Wöhler	In gadolinite and other rare minerals
In'di-um..... From its indigo spectrum	In	114.8	7.4	155	III.	1863	Reich and Richter	In certain zinc ores
Lan'tha-num..... Gr. lanthanō, conceal	La	139.0	6.1	810	III.	1839	Mosander	In cerite and other rare minerals
Sa-ma'ri-um..... Samarskī, a Russian savant	Sa	150.4	7.7	About 1350	III.	1879	Boisbaudran	In samarskite, cerite, and other rare minerals
Eu-ro'pi-um..... Europe, + -IUM	Eu	152.0	.....	.....	III.	1896	Demarcay
Thal'li-um..... Gr. thallos, budding twig	Tl	204.0	11.85	302	I. or III.	1862	Crookes	In pyrites and in flue-dust of sulfuric-acid works
Car'bon..... L. carbo, charcoal	C	12.00	3.52‡	Infusible	IV.	.....	Prehistoric	In coal, limestone, and all organic matter
Sil'i-con..... L. silex, flint	Si	28.3	2.0-2.4	1370	IV.	1823	Berzelius	In quartz (SiO_2). (Most abundant element after oxygen.) (amounts
Ti-ta'ni-um..... L. Titanes, sons of the earth	Ti	48.1	3.54	About 1850	IV.	1789	Gregor	Widely diffused in rocks and clays, in small
Ger-ma'ni-um..... L. Germania, Germany	Ge	72.5	5.47	About 900	IV.	1886	Winkler	In argyrodite, a rare mineral
Zir-co'ni-um..... Per. zargūn, gold-colored	Zr	90.6	4.15	Above 1400	IV.	1824	Berzelius	In zircon and other rare minerals
Tin (stannum)..... Anglo-Saxon, tin	Sn	119.0	7.3	232	II. or IV.	.....	Prehistoric	Mainly in cassiterite (SnO_2)
Ce'ri-um..... Planet Ceres	Ce	140.25	6.68	623	III. or IV.	1803	Berzelius	In cerite and other rare minerals
Gad'o-lin'i-um..... Gadolin, a Russian chemist	Gd	157.3	.....	.....	III.	1886	Marignac	In rare minerals, as gadolinite, etc.
Lead (plumbum)..... Anglo-Saxon, lead	Pb	207.10	11.37	327	II. or IV.	.....	Prehistoric	In galena (PbS) and other ores
Tho'ri-um..... God Thor	Th	232.42	11.00	About 1450	IV.	1828	Berzelius	In thorite and other rare minerals
Ni'tro-gen..... L. natrum, natron, + -GEN	N	14.01	0.38‡	−211	V.	1772	Rutherford	In the atmosphere and organic matter
Phos'phor-us..... L. < Gr., light-bearing	P	31.0	1.8-2.3	44	V.	1669	Brandt	In bones, and in apatite and many minerals
Va-na'di-um..... Goddess Vanadis (Freya)	V	51.1	5.5	1710	V.	1830	Sefstrom	In vanadinite and other rare minerals
As'se-nic..... L. arsenicum	As	74.96	5.73	Volatile, 450	V.	1694	Schröder	Native, as sulfid, and in various metallic ores
Co-lum'bi-um (niobium)..... Columbia	Cb	93.5	12.7	About 1950	V.	1801	Hatchett	In columbite and other rare minerals
An'ti-mo-ny (stibium)..... LL. antimonium	Sb	120.2	6.62	629	V.	1450	Valentine	Chiefly as sulfid, and in various metallic ores
Ter'bi-um..... Ytterby, a town in Sweden	Tb	159.2	.....	.....	III.	1843	Mosander	In rare minerals, as gadolinite, etc.
Dys-pro'si-um..... Gr. dysprositos, hard to speak with	Dy	162.5	.....	.....	III.	1886	Lecoq de Boisbaudran	In holmium, samarskite, gadolinite, etc.
Er'bi-um..... Ytterby, a town in Sweden	Er	167.4	4.8	.....	III.	1843	Mosander	In rare minerals, as gadolinite, etc.
Tan'ta-lum..... Tantalus (Gr. myth.)	Ta	181.0	10.4	About 2600	V.	1802	Ekeberg	In tantalite and other rare minerals
Bis'muth..... G. (unknown origin)	Bi	208.0	9.80	268	V.	1450	Basil Valentine	Native, as sulfid, and in rare minerals
Ox'y-gen..... Gr. oxys, acid, + -GEN	O	16.00	1.13‡	−253	II. or VI.	1774	Priestley	Free in air. (Forms one-half the earth's crust, combined.)
Sul'fur (Sul'phur)..... L. sulfur	S	32.07	2.07	115-119	II. or VI.	.....	Prehistoric	Native, and in many natural sulfids and sulfates
Chro'mi-um..... Gr. chrōma, color	Cr	52.0	6.5	1510	II. or VI.	1797	Vauquelin	Mainly in chrome-iron ore
Se-le'ni-um..... Gr. selēnē, moon	Se	79.2	4.5	170-180	II. or VI.	1817	Berzelius	Mainly in sulfur as an impurity
Mo-lyb'de-num..... Gr. molybdos, lead	Mo	96.0	8.6	Above 2500	II. or VI.	1782	Hjelm	Mainly as molybdenite (MoS_2)
Te-lu'ri-um..... L. tellus, earth	Te	127.5	6.0	446	II. or VI.	1782	Reichtenstein	In several minerals
Thu'li-um..... Thule, Northland	Tm	168.5	.....	.....	III.	1879	Cleve	In rare minerals, as gadolinite, etc.
Tung'sten (wolframium)..... Sw., heavy stone	W	184.0	19.1	2900-3000	IV. or VI.	1781	d'Elhujar	Mainly in wolframite ($MnFeWO_4$)
U-ra'ni-um..... Planet Uranus	U	238.5	18.7	.....	II. or VI.	1789	Klaproth	In pitchblende and other rare minerals
Flu'or-in..... L. fluor, < fluo, flow	F	19.0	1.11§	−223	I. or VII.	1771	Scheele	In fluorite (CaF_2) and other minerals
Chlo'rin..... Gr. chlōros, green	Cl	35.46	1.47§	−102	I. or VII.	1774	Scheele	In common salt (NaCl) and other chlorids
Man'ga-nese..... L. magnes, magnet	Mn	54.93	7.39	1220	II. or VII.	1774	Gahn	In pyrolusite and many other minerals
Bro'min..... Gr. brōmos, stench	Br	79.92	3.15†	−7.3	I. or VII.	1826	Balard	Mainly in sea-water and other natural brines
I'o-din..... Gr. iōdes, violet	I	126.92	4.95	114	I. or VII.	1811	Courtois	Mainly in ashes of seaweeds
Yt-ter'bi-um (Neoytterbium)..... Ytterby, a town in Sweden	Yb	172.0	.....	.....	III.	1878	Marignac	In rare minerals, as gadolinite, etc.
Lu-te'ti-um or Lu-te'ci-um..... Lutetia, ancient name of Paris	Lu	174.0	.....	.....	III.	1907	Urbain and Welsbach	In samarskite, gadolinite, etc.
I'ron (ferrum)..... Anglo-Saxon, īren	Fe	55.85	7.86	1515	II. or IV.	..	Prehistoric	As oxid and sulfid, and in nearly all rocks
Nick'el..... Sw., abbr. of kupparnickel	Ni	58.68	8.9	1452	II. or VIII.	1751	Cronstedt	In many metallic ores
Co'balt..... G. kobold, goblin	Co	58.97	8.6	1490	II. or VIII.	1733	Brandt	In many metallic ores
Ru-the'ni-um..... Ruthenia, Russia	Ru	101.7	12.26	About 2400	II. or VII.	1845	Claus	With platinum and iridosmin
Rho'di-um..... Gr. rhodon, rose	Rh	102.9	12.1	1960	II. or VIII.	1804	Wollaston	With platinum and iridosmin
Pal-la'di-um..... Planet Pallas	Pd	106.7	11.4	1549	II. or IV.	1804	Wollaston	Native, and with platinum and gold
Os'mi-um..... Gr. osmē, odor	Os	190.9	22.48	About 2700	II. or VI.	1803	Tennant	In iridosmin and native platinum
I-rid'i-um..... L. Iris, a rainbow	Ir	193.1	22.4	2375	II. or IV.	1803	Tennant	In iridosmin
Plat'i-num..... Sp. platina, dim of plata, silver	Pt	195.2	21.5	1755	II. or IV.	1741	Wood	Mainly as native platinum in river-gravels

In the above table the Mendeléeff classification has been mainly followed. Formerly elements were grouped according to their resemblance to some member, as the Potassium group, Li, Na, K, Rb, and Cs; the Calcium group, Ca, Sr, and Ba; the Magnesium group, Gl, Mg, Zn, and Cd; the Aluminum group, Al, Yt, Ga, Zr, Er, In, La, Pr, Nd, and Th; the Iron group, Fe, Co, Ni, U, Cr; the Manganese group, Va, Cr, Mn, and Mo; the Antimony group, Sb and Bi; the Tin group, Ti, Cb, Sn, Ta, and W; the Silver group, Cu, Ag, Hg, Tl, and Pb; and the Platinum group, Rh, Ru, Pd, Au, Pt, Ir, and Os. Since the acceptance of the periodic law elements have been arranged in the order of their atomic weights, and each group shows indications of an arithmetical progression. See PERIODIC LAW, under LAW.

*The factors in the columns of specific gravities and melting-points naturally vary with the form that the element takes (e. g., in carbon the specific gravity varies as diamond, charcoal, or lampblack is taken), but as far as possible the factor of the most typical form is given.

The Stoic definition of an element is, 'that out of which, as their first principle, things generate, are made, and into which, as their last remains, they are resolved.'
R.-P. Vocab. Philos., p. 154. [ed. a. c. 1878.]

5. The natural sphere or environment; as, the element of fishes is water; a person out of his element.
A man's native language . . . is the element in which he always move at ease. — AGASSIZ James's Brazil p. 97. [ʀ. ᴀ.]

6. Chem. That form of matter which can not be decomposed by any means known to science. See table on page 802. In addition to these there are: Hafnium, Holmium, Illinium, Lanthanum, Polonium, Praseodymium, and Rhenium, which see.
At present 88 such substances are recognized: and they constitute the whole of the known matter of the universe, excepting uncombined gases, copper, zinc, or tin combined (as sodium chlorid, etc.). They have been found to be present in the sun and stars through spectroscopic analysis. A belief prevails with some, especially since the recent developments in radioactivity, that all these are modifications of a single primal hypothetical substance called protyle. The elements are broadly divided into metals (potassium, lead, etc.) and non-metals or metalloids (bromin, oxygen, etc.).

7. Alchemy. One of three fundamental substances — sulfur, mercury, and salt. 8. Biol. One of the primary parts of an organism, or one of the pieces composing such a part; also, a cell or morphological unit. 9. Math. (1) One of a number of parts composing a symmetrical whole; one of the geometrical forms or data which together compose a figure, as a line, a point, a plane, a space; in calculus, an infinitely small portion of a magnitude; a generatrix. (2) A term in an algebraic expression. See LEADING ELEMENT, Exx. (1). (3) One of the dissimilar substances, usually metallic and acted upon by an exciting fluid, in a voltaic cell or battery, or in a thermo-electric couple. (2) A voltaic cell. 11†. pl. The characteristic letters of the alphabet. — L. elementum, first principle.] Syn.: see PART; PARTICLE.— Bessellian elements (Astron.), data, originally used by Bessel, for making exact predictions of solar eclipses at any part of the world: given in the Nautical Almanac.—dry element, an element having no exciting fluid, as in a voltaic pile.—e. of an analytic function (Math.), in an analytic function, any one of the series in the aggregate defining the function.—floral e., the essential or characteristic element of a flora; as, cacti form a large floral element in our cultivated flora.—fluid voltaic element, —half-period e. (Optics), half a wave-length.—leading e., in a determinant, the leading term.—magnetic elements (of any place), the inclination of the earth's attraction and the dip and declination of the magnetic needle (thereat).—natural system of the elements (Chem.), a systematic arrangement of chemical elements as suggested by Mendeleeff and Lothar Meyer. See PERIODIC LAW, under LAW.—negative e. (Elec.), that element or plate of a voltaic cell into which the current passes from the exciting fluid; the one that is not acted upon by the analysis during generation of the current; the one to which the positive conductor or electrode is attached.—null e. (Math.), in any manifold, an element whose relation to other elements does not alter the latter's value.—phonetic e., any single articulate sound.—plastic e. (Physiol.), a food-element suitable for tissue-building.—positive e. (Elec.), the opposite or reverse of the negative element.—radial elements (Ich.), the actinosts and basesots which support the fins.—thermo-electric e., one of the substances forming a thermo-electric couple.—voltaic e., one of the substances forming a voltaic couple.

el'e-men'tal, 1 el'i-men'tal; 2 ĕl'ē-mĕn'tal, a. 1. Of or pertaining to an element or elements; hence, pure; primary. (1) Pertaining to material elements; as, elemental action. (2) Pertaining to rudiments or first principles; rudimentary; as, elemental education. 2. Chem. Elementary. 3. Forming a necessary part or ingredient; as, an elemental salt.
— el'e-men'tal-ism, n. The doctrine that the heathen deities were at first personified elemental powers.—el'e-men-tal'ist, n.—el'e-men'tal-ly, adv.

el-lipse', } 1 e-lips'; 2 ĕ-lĭps', n. 1. Geom. A el-lips'[p], } plane curve such that the sum of the distances from any point of the curve of two fixed points (foci) is a constant. It may be drawn by attaching to f and g the ends of a string longer than fg, stretching the slack of the string by a pencil-point, and moving the latter around. See CONIC SECTION.

Ellipse.

Kepler ascertained, by direct observation, that the planets describe ellipses round the sun. MARY SOMERVILLE Connection of Phys. Sciences § 2, p. 9. [K. & B. 1834.]

2. Geom. A figure or plot of land bounded by such a curve. 3. Astron. The orbit of a planet, which approximates an ellipse. 4. [Rare.] Gram. Ellipsis. [< L. ellipsis; see ELLIPSIS.] — aberrational ellipse (Astron.), the small ellipse apparently traversed by a star in the course of a year; its major axis is always parallel to the ecliptic and 41 seconds long; its minor axis varies with its latitude.— e. of stress (Math.), an ellipse whose center is at a point where the stresses are to be determined in a strained solid and whose principal axes are the normals to the planes of principal stress, while the principal semiaxes are proportional to the intensities of the principal stresses.
el-lips'ing, pa. [Rare.] Moving in elliptical orbits.
el-lip'sis, 1 e-lip'sɪs; 2 ĕ-lĭp'sis, n. [-SES, 1 -sīz; 2 -sēs, pl.] Gram. & Rhet. 1. The omission of a word or words necessary to the complete construction of a sentence but not required for the understanding of it, as in "who steals my purse steals trash," who being equivalent to he who: used as a rhetorical figure for the sake of increased vividness and energy. Compare APOSIOPESIS; ASYNDETON; BRACHYLOGY; ZEUGMA. 2. Print. Marks indicating the omission of letters or words, as . . . or * * *. 3†. An ellipse. [L., < Gr. elleipsis, < elleipō, come short.]

el-lip'so-graph, 1 e-lip'so-graf; 2 ĕ-lĭp'so-grȧf, n. An instrument or machine for describing ellipses. [< Gr. elleipsis (see ELLIPSIS) + -GRAPH.] el-lip'to-graph‡.
el-lip'soid, 1 e-lip'soid; 2 ĕ-lĭp'sŏid, n. 1. Geom. A solid every plane section of which is an ellipse or a circle; in higher geometry, the surface of such a solid. 2. Anthrop. A cranium whose superior projection has an elliptical form. [< Gr. elleipsis (see ELLIPSIS) + -OID.] — Bessel's ellipsoid, Clarke's e., etc. (Math.), spheroids of various dimensions proposed by their authors as bases of reference which approximate the earth in shape. A number of these have been brought forward from time to time, whose compression varied from 1/280.4 to 1/300.2.— central e. (Math.), an ellipsoid whose center corresponds with the mass center of a body.— e. of expansion (Math.), the shape assumed by an elementary sphere in a body subjected to strain.— e. of gyration (Math.), one in which the central perpendicular on a tangent plane is equal to the radius of gyration of a given body about such perpendicular.— e. of inertia (Math.), same as ELLIPSOID OF GYRATION.— e. of revolution, an ellipsoid generated by the revolution of an ellipse around one of its principal axes: called prolate when the revolution is around the major axis, oblate when around the minor axis.— equimomental e., an ellipsoid that represents by its moments of inertia about all axes the corresponding moments of a given body.— Fresnel's e. (Crystal.), an ellipsoid whose semiaxes are taken proportionally to certain values of the light-velocity for a given biaxial crystal.— irrotational e., any ellipsoid not a solid of revolution.— planetary e., an oblate ellipsoid.— el-lip'soid, el"lip-soi'dal, a.
el-lip'sone, 1 e-lip'sōn; 2 ĕ-lip-sōn, n. A rotary wind moving in an ellipse. [< ELLIPSE + one in CYCLONE.] — el"lip-son'ic, a. Elliptical, moving in, or having the properties of, an ellipse.
el-lip'tic, } 1 e-lip'tɪk, -tɪ-kəl; 2 ĕ-lĭp'tic, -ti-cal, a. 1.
el-lip'ti-cal, } Of, pertaining to, or shaped like an ellipse; oblong with rounded ends. 2. Gram. & Rhet. Characterized by ellipsis, as a term or expression; shortened; in general, characterized by an omission of that which is to be supposed or supplied: commonly elliptical.

Pericles' . . . mode of reasoning is singularly elliptical,—in reality most consecutive, yet in appearance often incoherent. MACAULAY Essays, Athenian Orators p. 436. [A. 1880.]

3. Bot. & Entom. Long, oval, and equally rounded at both ends. 4. Math. Characterized by a pair of imaginary elements. [< LL. ellipticus, < Gr. elliptikos, < elleipsis; see ELLIPSIS.]
— elliptic compasses, an instrument for drawing ellipses. — e. involution, an involution having only imaginary double points.— e.-lanceolate, a. Partaking of both an elliptic and a lanceolate form.— e. motion, motion on an ellipse such that equal arcs are described about a focus in equal times.— e. point, a point having for its indicatrix an ellipse.— e. spring, a carriage-spring made by joining the ends of a pair of plates or of a series of plates curved like elliptic arcs.— el-lip'ti-cal-ly, adv. 1. In the form of an ellipse. 2. With the omission of a part; by using ellipsis; as, to speak elliptically.— el-lip'ti-cal-ness, n.— el"lip-tic'i-ty, n. 1. The state of being elliptic. 2. The degree of deviation of an ellipse from circularity; especially, as to the shape of the earth, the difference between the polar and equatorial semidiameters divided by the equatorial (rarely by the polar).— el-lip'to-graph, n. An ellipsograph.— el-lip'toid, a. Like an ellipse.
El'lis, 1 el'ɪs; 2 ĕl'is, n. 1. Alexander John (6/14 1814–10/28 1890), an English philologist; Early English Pronunciation. 2. George (1753–4/10 1815), an English writer. 3. Henry (1721–1/21 1806), an English naturalist; Governor of New York and of Georgia. 4. Sir Henry (11/29 1775–1/15 1869), an English scholar; librarian of British Museum. 5. 2. A figure or conventionalized representation used as the distinctive badge of a person, family, etc. 3. An allegorical picture or the like to illustrate and impress some moral truth; often explained by an accompanying motto, description, or explanation. 4. [Rare.] A type or example. 5. [Archaic.] A moral fable or allegory suitable for pictorial expression. 6†. An inlaid or inserted ornament; mosaic-work; inlay. [< F. emblème, < L. emblema; see EMBLEMA.] SYN.: attribute, figure, sign, symbol, token, type. Emblem is the English form of emblema, a Latin word of Greek origin, signifying a figure beaten out on a metallic vessel by the hammer; hence, a figure inlaid in wood, stone, or other material as a copy of some natural object. The Greek word symbolon denoted a victor's wreath, a check, or any object that might be compared with or found to correspond with another, whether there was or was not anything in the objects compared to suggest the comparison. Thus a coat of emblems is a symbol represents. An emblem has some natural fitness to suggest that for which it stands; a symbol has been chosen or agreed upon to represent something else, with or without natural fitness; a sign does actually suggest the thing with or without reason, and with or without intention or choice. A symbol may be also an emblem; thus the elements of bread and wine in the Lord's Supper are both appropriate emblems and his own chosen symbols of suffering and death. A statement of doctrines is often called a symbol of faith; but it is not an emblem. On the other hand, the same thing may be both a sign and a symbol; a letter of the alphabet is a sign which indicates a sound; but letters are often used as mathematical, chemical, or astronomical symbols. A color is become object or act given as pledge or expression of feeling or intent; the sign may be unintentional; the token is voluntary; kind looks may be signs of regard; a gift will be a token; a thing, which is a natural emblem of eternity, and also its accepted symbol, is frequently given as a token of friendship or love. A figure in the sense here considered is something that represents an idea to the mind somewhat as a form is represented to the eye, as in drawing, painting, or sculpture; as representing a future reality, a type is a figure; in the same sense as a type. An image is a visible representation, especially in sculpture, having or supposed to have a close resemblance to that which it represents. A type is in religion a representation of a greater reality to come; the antitype of one object as the type of the class whose characteristics it exhibits, as in the case of animal or vegetable types. An attribute in art is some accessory used to characterize a figure or image; the attribute is often an emblem or symbol; thus the eagle is the attribute of St. John as an emblem of lofty spiritual vision. See FIGURE; IMAGE; SIGN.

And judgment all embroil'd. By sadness and self-will.
MATTHEW ARNOLD Empedocles on Etna act i, sc. 2.

II. i. To become disturbed or involved in disorder or conflict; cause disorder, disturbance, or trouble. [< F. embrouiller, < em- (< L. in), in, + brouiller; see broil, n.] em-brolle't; em-broyle't, — em-bröil'er, n.

em-bröil's, pr. Embroils.

em-bröild', pp. Embroiled.

em-bröil'ment, n. 1. The act, process, or result of embroiling, or the state of being embroiled; disturbance; contention; tumult; strife; quarrel. 2. A confused, perplexed, or disturbed condition; complication.

One sentence of common sense brought the absurd embroilment to a rational conclusion.
G. O. TREVELYAN Macaulay vol. i, ch. 5, p. 319. [n.]

em-bronze', 1 em-bronz'; 2 em-brônz', v. To represent or embody in bronze; color like bronze; bronze.

em-brown', 1 em-braun'; 2 em-brown', v. I. t. 1. To make brown, tawny, or dark-colored.

ROBERT BROWNING In Three Days st. 3.

2. To render dark, dim, or obscure; darken; make shady, as, evening embrowns the landscape.

II. i. To grow or become brown or dusky.

His harvest fields and labor have the leaves of the heavy head,' as if their fruitage were indeed embrowning in the sun.
CLAIRE Eng. Lit. and Lang., Thomson in vol. ii, p. 286. [s. 1869.]

em-brute', 1 em-brūt'; 2 ĕm-brut', vt. & vi. To imbrute.

em'bry-ec'to-my, n. [< EMBRYO- + -ECTOMY.] = EMBRYOTOMY, n. Obstet. An operation sometimes performed in cases of extra-uterine gestation, the fetus being removed through an incision made in the abdomen. [< EMBRYO + Gr. ektomē, excision.]

em'bry-o, 1 em'bry-ō; 2 ĕm'bry-o, a. Pertaining to or in the state of an embryo; being still in the germ; undeveloped; incipient; rudimentary. em'bry-al;.

This girl's embryal beauty.
N. P. WILLIS People I Have Met, Tey Veil p. 294. [n. a. s. 1850.]

— embryo buds (Bot.), adventitious buds found beneath the bark of many trees.

em'bry-o, n. [-OS, 1 -ōz; 2 -ōs, pl.] 1. The germ or rudimentary form of anything in its earliest development. Especially: (1) The vitalized germ of an organism before it has developed its distinctive form. See illus. under EGG, n. — e. of an idea (Psychol.), the first stage of its existence (in the human species the first five weeks), after which it is usually called a fetus, or during the whole time it is within the egg-coverings or the womb. (3) Bot. The rudimentary plant within the seed, which makes its appearance soon after fertilization of the ovule by the pollen and then passes through a period of rest until the germination or sprouting of the seed.

The youngest seedling, and even the embryo in the seed, is already an epitome of the herb or tree.
ASA GRAY Field-Book of Botany lesson xi, p. 74. [n. a. s. 1868.]

2. A larval stage of one of the lower animals; as, the free-swimming embryo of an oyster. [< F. embryon, < Gr. embryon, < en, in, + bryō, swell.] — em'bry-o-bear'er, n. Bot. See SUSPENSION. Same as OOGAMY. — hexacanth embryo (Helminth.), an embryonic tapeworm having six hooks by means of which it bores its way through the walls of the alimentary canal into the animal body's cavity of its host. — in e., in an undeveloped or incipient stage or state; not yet developed or advanced, as a project or undertaking.

em'bry-o-car'di-a, 1 em'bri-o-kär'di-ə; 2 ĕm'bry-o-cär'di-a, n. Pathol. An affection of the heart characterised by a heart-beat which resembles that of a fetus.

em'bry-o-ec'to-my, n. = EMBRYOTOMY, n. Obstet.

The destruction of the embryo or of the fetus in the womb, as in cases where delivery is impossible, or for the purpose of producing abortion. [< EMBRYO + Gr. ektomē, kill.] — em'bryo-ec'to-nic, a. — em'bryo-ec'to-nous, a.

em'bry-of'er-ous, 1 em'bri-of'er-us; 2 ĕm'bry-of'er-ŭs, a. [Rare.] Containing or bearing an embryo.

em'bry-og'e-ny, 1 em'bri-oj'e-ni; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏj'e-ny, n. 1. The science of the formation and growth of organisms. 2. The formation or origination and growth of the embryo; the generation of organisms. In plants, embryogeny may be either monoplastic, or indirect or heteroplastic. In the former case the embryo resembles the parent form and develops into an exact copy of it; in the latter, it frequently differs in a marked manner from the adult form, which emerges from it as a lateral bud. See PROEMBRYO; SUSPENSOR. [< EMBRYO + -GENY.] em'bry-o-gen'e-sis‡; — em'bry-og'o-ny. — o-gen'ic, a. — o-ge-nic', a.

em'bry-o-graph, 1 em'bri-o-graf'; 2 ĕm'bry-o-gräf, n. A combination of a compound microscope and a camera lucida, used for drawing outlines of embryos, etc., on a large scale. [< EMBRYO + -GRAPH.] — em'bry-og'raph-er, n. — em'bry-o-graph'ic, a. — em'bry-og'ra-phy, n. The process produced by an embryograph; pertaining to or of the nature of embryography.

em'bry-og'ra-phy, 1 em'bri-og'ra-fi; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏg'ra-fy, n. A description of or treatise upon undeveloped organisms or embryos. [< EMBRYO + -GRAPHY.]

em'bry-o-ism, 1 em'bri-o-izm; 2 ĕm'bry-o-ĭsm, n. The state of being an embryo; the condition of an embryo.

Embryol., abbr. Embryology.

em'bry-ol'o-gy, 1 em'bri-ol'o-ji; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏl'o-gy, n. That branch of biology which deals with embryos or with the formation and development of organisms. As a branch of somatology (see SOMATOLOGY), human embryology has been divided by some authorities into (1) teratology, (2) heredity, and (3) ethnic and racial anatomy.

There is not a single fact in Embryology to justify the assumption that the laws of development, now known to be so precise and definite for every animal, . . . have ever been allowed to run into each other.
L. AGASSIZ Methods of Study ch. 16, p. 319. [n. a. s. 1863.]

[< EMBRYO + -LOGY.] — experimental embryology, the study of the effects produced by modifying the conditions under which embryos develop, in order to determine the significance and value of the phenomena in normally developing embryos. — em'bry-o-log'ic, — em'bry-o-log'i-cal, a. — em'bry-o-log'i-cal-ly, adv. — em'bry-ol'o-gist, n. One interested or versed in embryology.

em'bry-o'ma, 1 em'bri-ō'mə; 2 ĕm'bry-ō'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] Pathol. A tumor containing embryonic structures or derived from embryonic elements. [< EMBRYO.]

em'bry-on, 1 em'bri-on; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏn, n. [Archaic.] An embryo.

The earth was form'd: but in the womb as yet
Of waters, embryon immature involved.
MILTON P. L. bk. vii, l. 277.

— em'bry-on, a. Embryonic; embryo. — em'bry-o-nal, a. Of or pertaining to an embryo or embryonic stage; embryonic. — em'bry-on-ate'ly, — embryonal vesicle (Biol.), a globular portion of the protoplasm within the embryo-sac, that after impregnation develops into the embryo; oosphere.

Em'bryo-na'tæ, n. pl. [Rare.] Embryonate or flowering plants.

em'bry-o-nate, 1 em'bri-o-nēt; 2 ĕm'bry-o-nāt, a. 1. Pertaining to or resembling an embryo; bearing embryos; containing or being an embryo; fecundated; embryonal. 2†. Embedded in other bodies.

em'bry-on'ic, 1 em'bri-on'ik; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏn'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or like an embryo; being in the state of an embryo; rudimentary; undeveloped. — embryonic sac (Bot.), same as EMBRYO-SAC.— e. shield (Biol.), the compacted cytoplasm portion of the blastodermic cavity wherein the embryo is developed. — em'bry-on-ic'al-ly, adv.

em'bry-o-nif'er-ous, 1 em'bri-o-nif'er-us; 2 ĕm'bry-o-nĭf'er-ŭs, a. Bearing or having an embryo. [< EMBRYO + L. fero, bear.]

em'bry-on't-form, 1 em'bri-on't-fōrm; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏn't-fōrm, a. Having the form or character of an embryo.

em'bry-o-pa-thol'o-gy, 1 em'bri-o-pə-thol'o-ji; 2 ĕm'bry-o-pa-thŏl'o-gy, n. The branch of medical science that treats of abnormalities and diseases of the fetus.

Em'bry-oph'y-ta, 1 em'bri-of'i-tə; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏf'i-ta, n. pl. Bot. An extensive group of the higher divisions of plants, made by Engler's system, embracing all those plants that have a true embryo in connection with the female organism, and, accordingly, including all those above the Thallophyta. Compare MYXOTHALLOPHYTA. [< Gr. embryon, embryo, + phyton, plant.] — em'bry-o-phyte, n.

em'bry-o-plas'ty, 1 em'bri-o-plas'ti; 2 ĕm'bry-o-plăs'tic, a. Of or pertaining to the formation and development of an embryo. [< EMBRYO; and see PLASTIC.]

em'bry-o-sac', 1 em'bri-o-sak'; 2 ĕm'bry-o-săc', n. Bot. The sac, formed of one cell or many, within the nucleus of the ovule of phanerogams. It contains the embryonal vesicle.

em'bry-o-scope, 1 em'bri-o-skōp; 2 ĕm'bry-o-scōp, n. An instrument for observing the development of the embryo of birds. [< EMBRYO + -SCOPE.] — em'bry-o-scop'ic, a.

em'bry-ot'e-ga, 1 em'bri-ot'i-gə; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏt'e-ga, n. Bot. A hardened covering of the radicle of some kinds of embryos, of aspecial character, which greatly retards or facilitates like a lid in germination. [< EMBRYO + Gr. tegos, roof.] em'bry-o-te'gi-um‡.

em'bry-ot'hlast, 1 em'bri-ot'hlast; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏt'hlăst, n. Obstet. A crushing of the bones of the fetus to render its removal possible when parturition is exceedingly difficult.

em'bry-o-thlast, 1 em'bri-o-thlast; 2 ĕm'bry-o-thlăst, n. Obstet. A cephalotribe. [< EMBRYO + Gr. thlastos, broken.] em'bry-o-thlas'ta‡.

em'bry-ot'ic, a. Same as EMBRYONIC.

em'bry-ot'o-my, 1 em'bri-ot'o-mi; 2 ĕm'bry-ŏt'o-my, n. 1. Obstet. The cutting of a fetus in the womb to reduce its bulk and facilitate delivery. 2. The dissection or anatomical examination of embryos.

em'bry-o-troph, 1 em'bri-o-trof; 2 ĕm'bry-o-trŏf, n. Biol. Food-yolk. [< EMBRYO + Gr. trophē, nourishment, < trephō, nourish.] — em'bry-o-troph'ic, a. — em'bry-ot'ro-phy, n. Nutrition of the embryo or fetus.

em'bry-ous, a. [Archaic.] Embryonic.

em'bry-u'lci, 1 em'bri-ul'kī; 2 ĕm'bry-ul'cy, n. Obstet. Forcible extraction of a fetus, as by embryotomy; removal of a dead fetus with instruments. [< Gr. embryoulkia, < embryon, EMBRYO, + helkō, draw.] — em'bry-ul'cu-late, — em'bry-ul'cus, n. An instrument for effecting embryulcia.

em-bulk', vt. [Rare.] To make of greater bulk.

Em'bur-y, 1 em'bur-i; 2 ĕm'bur-y, Philip (?-1726-8-?-1775). An American divine of German parentage, but born in Ireland; the first Methodist preacher in the United States.

Em'den, 1 em'den; 2 ĕm'dĕn, n. 1. A fortified seaport town in Hanover, Germany. 2. A coal-black breed of large geese said to have originated in Emden, Westphalia. See GOOSE. Emb'dent. 3. See CRUISER ISLANDS.

E. M. E., abbr. Engineer of mines of different potential.

E'mek-ke-zig', 1 i'mek-ki-zig'; 2 ē'mĕk-ke-zĭg', n. Bib. Jos. xviii, 21.

E. F., E'ff'ĕn'dĭ, E'ff'ĕn'dĭ, E'ff'ĕn'dĭ; E-ĕn'dĭ-le, 1 ē-fi'fi-e, 2 ē-ĕf'fi-e; It. Pg. Sp. E-mi'li-a, 1 ē-mi'li-ə, 2 ē-mĭ'li-a.

e-mend', 1 i-mend'; 2 ē-mĕnd', vt. 1. To alter the form or words of (a work or document) with a view to improvement; make corrections in, especially as a result of criticism. 2. [Rare.] To change (anything) for the better; free from faults; correct; amend. [< L. emendo; see AMEND.] e-men'date‡.

SYN.: amend. A text, writing, or statement is amended by the author or by some adequate authority; it is emended by conjecture. A motion is amended by the mover or by the assembly; a constitution is amended by the people; an ancient text is emended by a critic who believes that what seems to him the better reading is what the author wrote. See AMEND.— e-mend'a-bl(e), a.— e-mend'ate-ly‡, adv. Correctly.— em'en-da'tor, n. One who emends; a corrector.— e-mend'a-tor-y, a. 1. Of or pertaining to emending; amendatory. 2†. Disciplinary; corrective.— e-mend'er, n.

e-men'dals, 1 i-men'dəlz; 2 ē-mĕn'dals, n. pl. Moneys reserved to make up losses or provide for unexpected emergencies: a term used by the Society of the Inner Temple, London.

[< F. émeraude, < L. smaragdus, < Gr. smaragdos, green name of a precious stone.] em'er-ant‡; em'er-aud‡; em'er-od‡; em'er-old‡; hem'er-auld. — Brazilian emerald, a Brazilian tourmaline resembling the emerald in color: trade name. ecclesiastical e., — Oriental e., a valuable transparent variety of corundum. See CORUNDUM.— Uralian e., same as DEMANTOID.

e-merge', 1 i-mûrj'; 2 ē-mĕrg', v. [E-MERGED'; E-MERG'ING.] I. i. 1. To rise, as from a fluid; hence, to come forth from within or behind some covering or concealment; issue from a place or state of obscurity. 2. To become apparent; come into view or into existence; as, the star emerged from the shadow of the trees. 3. To present itself suddenly for solution; to "crop up"; as, the difficulty emerges. II. t. To immerge. [< L. emergo, < e, out, + mergo, dip.]

e-mer'gence, 1 i-mûr'jens; 2 ē-mĕr'gĕnc, n. 1. The act, process, or result of emerging; a rising or coming forth; a coming into view; as, the emergence of the moon from an eclipse; the emergence of a race from barbarism. 2. That which emerges; an outgrowth, as a prickle or hair growing from the subepidermic tissue of a plant. 3. An emergency; incident.

They call in their emergence. Upon countless saints and virgins.
THACKERAY The White Squall st. 6.

4. Astron. Same as EMERSION.

— grazing emergence (Astron.), light issuing from a transparent medium almost parallel with its surface.— path of e. (Geol.), the path pursued by the elastic waves produced by an earthquake when they reach the surface of shock to the point of emergence on the earth's surface.

e-mer'gen-cy, 1 i-mûr'jen-si; 2 ē-mĕr'gĕn-cy, n. [-CIES, 1 -siz; 2 -çĭs, pl.] 1. A sudden or unexpected occurrence or condition calling for immediate action; a pressing and pressing combination of circumstances: sometimes, less properly, used in the sense of urgent need or exigency.

Tell me how much has been your patient toil in obscurity, and I will tell you how far you will triumph in an emergency.
ANDREWS Getting On in the World ch. 14, p. 254. [n. c. a. 1873.]

2. [Rare.] Emergence. 3. [Australasia.] A purse, a substitute player; an emergency man. 4†. Casual, unexpected, or contingent gain or profit. SYN.: see NECESSITY.

— emergency cord (Railroads), a cord pulled in cases of emergency, automatically setting the air-brakes or otherwise stopping the train. Compare COMMUNICATION-CORD.

— e. gear (Auto.), a gear differing from the principle of differential motion: usually applied by means of a hollow sleeve working on a live axle, and engaging and disengaging a gang of three gears. Thus, it acts as a motionless clutch whose stresses are uniform, but it is not available for driving outside pinions when the stress upon it is excessive.— e. man. 1. A person or officer engaged for special service, as in Irish evictions. 2. [Eng.] In football or cricket, a player who acts as a substitute.— e. ration (Mil.), concentrated food.

e-mer'gent, 1 i-mûr'jent; 2 ē-mĕr'gĕnt, a. 1. Rising or emerging as from a fluid; issuing from covering, concealment, or surrounding; issuing forth; coming into view; also, derivative or logically resulting.

E. ATKINSON Ganot's Physics bk. vii, ch. 3, p. 449. [w. v. 1877.]

2. Coming unexpectedly, especially when demanding immediate action; urgent; pressing; sudden. 3. Tending to or provided for emergencies. [< L. emergen(t-)s, ppr. of emergo; see EMERGE.] — emergent year, a year from which time is computed; the first year of an epoch, as of the Christian era.— e-mer'gent-ly, adv.— e-mer'gent-ness, n.

e-mer'gent, n. 1. That which comes forth as a natural outgrowth or occurrence; that which emerges; the result of some natural process. 2†. An emergency.

em'er-il, 1 em'er-il; 2 ĕm'er-ĭl, n. 1. A glaziers' diamond. 2†. Emery. [Var. of EMERY.]

e-mer'it-ed, a. 1. Emeritus. 2. Skilled; experienced.

e-mer'i-tus, 1 i-mer'i-təs; 2 ē-mĕr'ĭ-tus, a. [L.] Retired from active service (as on account of age or infirmity), but retained in an honorary position: honorably relieved from duty after serving one's time or rendering sufficient service; as, a pastor or professor emeritus.

e-mer'i-tus, n. [-TI, 1 -tai; 2 -tī, pl.] 1. [Rare.] One (as a pastor or a college professor) who has been honorably retired from active duty, especially when retained on the pay-rolls. 2. Rom. Antiq. A soldier or official who had served out his legal time, and hence was entitled to special privileges, pension, etc.

e-mersed', 1 ɪ-mūrst'; 2 e-mẽrst', a. Bot. 1. Standing above and out of water. 2. Protruding above surrounding leaves. [< L. emersus, pp. of emergo; see EMERGE.]

e-mer'sion, 1 ɪ-mūr'shən; 2 e-mẽr'shon, n. 1. The act or process of emerging, coming forth, or rising out of or from behind something. 2. Astron. The reappearance of a heavenly body after being eclipsed or occulted; the reappearance of a star that has been lost in the sun's rays.— emersion wedge, see WEDGE.

Em'er-son, 1 em'ər-sən; 2 ĕm'er-son, Ralph Waldo (⁵/₂₅1803–⁴/₂₇1882). An American transcendental essayist, poet, and lecturer; Conduct of Life.

Em"er-so'ni-an, 1 em"ər-sō'nɪ-ən; 2 ĕm"er-sō'ni-an. I. a. Of, pertaining to, or like Ralph Waldo Emerson or his writings; hence, transcendental, oracular, sententious, and striking in thought and style. II. n. An admirer or follower of Emerson.— Em"er-so'ni-an-ism, n.

em'er-y¹, 1 em'ər-ɪ; 2 ĕm'er-y, n. 1. A very hard black or grayish-black variety of corundum, containing usually a small amount of magnetite or hematite intimately mixed. When ground to a powder, it is used for polishing, grinding, or abrading stone, glass, metal, etc.

Pain is like emery. If it scours anything that wants to be scoured it is good, otherwise it is not good. H. W. BEECHER in Drysdale's Prov. from Plymouth Pulpit, Trouble p. 216. [A. 1887.]

2. An emery-bag. [< OF. emeril, < It. smeriglio, < Gr. smyris, emery-powder.]— em'er-y-bag", n. A small bag or case filled with emery, used for keeping needles bright and clean.— e.-board, n. Paper-pulp mixed with emery and molded into slabs or other forms.— e.-cake, n. Emery mixed with beeswax or suet: for application to the abrading surface of buff-wheels or glaze-wheels.— e.-cloth, e.-paper, n. Cloth or paper coated with glue and emery: used as an abrasive.— e.-stick, n. A piece of wood coated with glue and emery: used for sharpening cutting edges and for abrading or polishing. e.-rifle‡.— e.-stone, n. A mixture of emery with clay, shellac, glue, or other substance, compacted into various forms: used as an abrasive.— e.-surfacer, n. A machine comprising an emery-wheel and a table adapted to slide under it so that work clamped to the table will be ground to a true surface. — e.-wheel, n. A wheel coated with emery, or made of emery-stone: for grinding or polishing.

An Emery-bag.

Em'er-y², 1 em'ər-ɪ; 2 ĕm'er-y, n. 1. A masculine proper name. e-mo'tion, 1 ɪ-mō'shən; 2 ɛ-mō'shon, n. 1. Any strong movement or perturbation of the conscious mind; an act or state of excited feeling; as, emotions of fear. The same mental condition may be spoken of either as simple emotion, when regarded from the purely subjective point of view; as passion, or affection, when regarded from the point of view of the object toward which it is directed; or as desire, when regarded as involving craving and tendency to excite the will.

Passion and emotion themselves are, in us, not without thought, and are always more or less treated as thought in a glass. MARTINEAU Types of Ethical Theory vol. ii. ch. i. p. 408. [MACM. 1891.]

2. Psychol. (1) The power or state of feeling in general. (2) Feeling in the sense in which it is distinct from the intellectual and the volitional. (3) A complex condition of consciousness, in which one or more forms of excited sensibility are expanded, made sensuous, and strengthened, by admixture of various peripheral or organic sensations that are caused by some primary feeling, and are directly or indirectly connected with its expression or satisfaction. To these sensations the name of "bodily resonance," or "somatic reaction," has been given; and altho they are not the whole of the emotion, as some psychologists have claimed, they are an important part of it. In this use of the word, the emotions are contrasted with the sentiments, or more refined and intellectual feeling-complexes; altho these, too, when strongly excited, may take on an emotional character. Hence the higher intellectual, esthetic, moral, and religious affective excitements are now commonly spoken of as special feelings, or as sentiments. Compare FEELING; SENTIMENT. Emotional states of consciousness are usually, if not invariably, either pleasurable or painful; or, as often happens, a mixture or alternation of pleasure and pain.

3. Literally, any disturbed or excited movement. 4. A moving forth; change of place; migration. [< L. emotus, pp. of emoveo, < e, out, + moveo, move.] SYN.: see FEELING; SENSATION.— e-mo'tion-al-ism, n. e-mo'tion-al-ist, n. In an emotional manner; with reference to the emotions.

e-mo'tion-al-ism, 1 ɪ-mō'shən-al-ɪzm; 2 ɛ-mō'shon-al-ĭsm, n. 1. The utterance or expression of emotion in any way. 2. The tendency to give too weakly to yield to the superficial emotions, or to subordinate reason and conscience to them; emotionality.

All attempts to make religion a matter of mere emotion, and have less reserve in displaying it, than in England or Scotland.
BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. ii. ch. 111. p. 788. [MACM. '11.]

3. The habit of appealing to the emotions rather than to the conscience or judgment; as, the emotionalism of a preacher.

e-mo'tion-al-ist, 1 ɪ-mō'shən-al-ɪst; 2 ɛ-mō'shon-al-ĭst, n. 1. One whose feelings are easily excited or wrought upon; a person of an emotional temperament: often used contemptuously. 2. One who aims to influence others through the emotions especially, one who aims unwisely or unworthily emotional. 3. In ethics, one who bases his theory of conduct on the emotions, as in making pleasure or happiness the supreme end; also, one who uses emotional methods in art, in religion, or in the promotion of any project.

e-mo'tion-al'i-ty, 1 ɪ-mō'shən-al'ɪ-tɪ; 2 ɛ-mō'shon-al'ĭ-ty, n. The state or quality of being emotional.

e-mo'tion-al-ize, 1 ɪ-mō'shən-al-aɪz; 2 ɛ-mō'shon-al-īz, vt. [Rare.] To make emotional; regard as a matter of emotion alone; excite the feelings of; as, religion emotionalized him.

FROUDE Cæsar ch. 26, p. 402. [n. 1881.]

em'per-or, 1 em'pɛr-ar or -ər; 2 ɛm'pɛr-or, n. 1. The sovereign of an empire: a title considered superior in dignity to that of king.

The Latin equivalent of emperor (imperator), originally denoting military command, was first given as a title to Julius Cæsar. It afterward became the title of the rulers of the Roman world. At the formation of the Holy Roman Empire the title was revived by Charlemagne, and continued to be borne by his successors, the sovereigns of the Holy Roman Empire. The last of these sovereigns, Francis II., took the title of hereditary emperor of Austria in 1804. Peter the Great of Russia assumed the title in 1721, and William I. of Germany assumed the title of German Emperor (Deutscher Kaiser) in 1871. Queen Victoria became Empress of India, May 1, 1876, under the Royal Titles Bill passed by Parliament, April 27, 1876; hence, the King of England is now also Emperor of India. In 1464 and 1852 the second emperorships were established in France under the first and third Napoleons. Mexico and Haiti have had emperors, and in 1822 Brazil became an empire over a royalty. Japan, Annam, Cochin-China, Abyssinia, and China have often been called emperors by Europeans.

2. One of various nymphalid butterflies; as, the purple emperor (Apatura iris). The goatweed emperor (Anasa andrini) is a western species feeding on the goatweed; the gray emperor (Chlorippe celtis) feeds on the hackberry, etc. (3) One of various large lamellicorn beetles or silkworm-moths, as the European Saturnia pavonia or the American Platysamia cecropia. — New E. (Egyptian Hist.), the period beginning with the founding of the eighteenth dynasty and the expulsion of the Hyksos.— Roman E., the domain of the Cæsars from Augustus to Theodosius (B. C. 29-395 A. D.), after whose reign it was divided into the Empires of the East and West. — Second E. (Fr. Hist.), the empire founded by Louis Napoleon, Dec. 2, 1852, which terminated with his deposition, Sept. 4, 1870.— the E. 1. The First Empire under Napoleon I. (1804–1815). 2. Same as EASTERN EMPIRE. — Western E., or E. of the West. 1. That part of the Roman empire that fell to Honorius on the death of his father, Theodosius the Great, A. D. 395; the Latin as distinguished from the Greek empire. Compare EASTERN EMPIRE. Its capitals were Rome and Ravenna. It ceased to exist with the fall of Rome, A. D. 476. 2. The Holy Roman Empire.— em'pire-ship, n.

Em'pire, n. A city in Cherokee county, Kan.

em-pir'ic,] l em-pir'ik, -ı-kəl; 2 ĕm-pir'ic, -i-cal (xm).

em-pir'i-cal, a. 1. Relating to or based on experience or observation; as, empirical proofs. Compare INTUITIVE. 2. Relying or skilled in experiments; relying on or guided by observation of facts rather than by accepted principles; generalizing hastily from limited facts; hence, charlatanic: applied especially to medical practitioners.

An empirical acquaintance with facts rises to a scientific knowledge of facts as soon as the mind discovers beneath the multiplicity of facts the reproduction of a universal law.
MAX MÜLLER Science of Language first series, p. 25. [s. 1871.]

Our almost absolute ignorance of the causes of some of the most fatal diseases, and the errors which nearly all our best medical treatment, have been often recognized.
LUCKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. i, p. 166. [A. 1873.]

[< F. empirique, < L. empiricus, < Gr. empeirikos, experienced, < en, in, + peira, trial.] em-per'lck†; em''pi-ric'tic†; em-pir'i-cu'tic†.— empirical formula, see FORMULA, 2. — e. law (Logic), a statement of theory or principle derived from observation and experience. — em-pir'i-cal-ly, adv. In an empirical manner; by experiment; without science.— em-pir'i-cal-ness, n.

em-pir'i-cism, n. Empirical methods are empirical; one who departs from established rules and conventions or generally accepted principles, relying on his own professed experience. 2. Among the ancient Greeks [E-], one of a school of physicians who maintained that experiment was the one requisite, as distinguished from the methodists, who relied on theory, and the dogmatists, who took middle ground; hence, in modern medicine, an unscientific physician who merely experiments; a quack.

Among the Greek physicians, there arose a sect who, professing to employ experience alone to the exclusion of generalization, analogy, and reasoning, deserved the name of empirics exclusively . . . the Empirics. HAMILTON Metaphysics p. 33. [G. & L. 1859.]

em-pir'i-cism, l em-pir'ı-sizm; 2 ĕm-pir'ı-cizm, n. 1. The especially distinctive character of empirical, and especially individual, observation and experience, to the exclusion of theories or assumed principles, and sometimes of all reasoned processes, inductive or deductive. 2. Empirical practice; the art of the empiric, quackery. 3. Philos. The doctrine that all knowledge is derived from the senses, or experience through the senses, or at least from the perception of simple historical facts. Empiricism: opposed to intuitionalism. Compare DOGMATISM.

Empiricism, as its name imports, affirms that all our knowledge comes from experience, and is therefore subject to all the imperfections and limitations of experience.
F. BOWEN Modern Philosophy p. 164. [A. 1877.]

em-pir''i-co-psy''cho-log'i-cal, a. l em-pir'ı-ko-sai'ko-loj'ı-kəl; 2 ĕm-pir'ı-co-sy''co-lŏj'i-cal. Characteristic of or relating to empirical,as opposed to philosophical or speculative psychology.

em-pir'i-cu'ti-cism, l em-pir'ı-o-krit'ı-sizm; 2 ĕm-pir'i-o-crit'i-cism, n. A system of philosophy founded by Richard Avenarius (1838–1896), based on so-called natural experience as elaborated by thought-processes. Its sole extra-empirical assumption is that the movements of our fellow men are to be interpreted in terms of our own sensorial states, or that of the inseparability of subject and object as underlying all experience.— em-pir''i-co-crit'i-cal, a.

em-pir'ism, l em'pı-rizm; 2 ĕm'pi-rĭsm, n. A conclusion reached on empirical grounds.

em-plec'ton, l em-plek'tən; 2 ĕm'plĕc'ton, n. Arch. A type of masonry commonly used by the Greeks, especially for fortification-walls, in which both exterior faces of the wall were built of ashlar in alternate headers and stretchers, and the intervening space was filled in with rubble. [L. < Gr. emplekton, rubble-work, < en, in, + plektō, weave.]

em-ploy', l em-plōi'; 2 ĕm-plŏy', vt. 1. To engage, have, or keep for or in service or duty; procure or retain the services of; set or keep at work; furnish work or occupation for; as, to employ an agent.

That man's mind is apt to become small as a pin point who is employed all his life in making a pin point.
MCCOSH Intuitions p. 20. [s. 1880.]

2. To make use of instrumentally; as, to employ money in trade; to employ alcohol as a solvent. 3. To devote to a certain occupation; apply; occupy; as, to employ one's energies in study; to employ one's time in writing. 4†. To enclose; infold. [< F. employer, < L. implico, infold, < in, in, + plico, fold.] SYN.: hire, use. In general terms it may be said that to employ is to devote to one's purpose, to use is to render subservient to one's purpose; what is used is viewed as more absolutely an instrument than what is employed; a merchant employs a clerk; he uses pen and paper; as a rule, use is not said of persons, except in a degrading sense; as, the conquerors used them as a go-between. Hence the expression common in some religious circles "that God would use me" is not to be commended; it has also the fault of representing the human worker as absolutely a passive and helpless instrument; the phrase is altogether unscriptural: the Scripture says, "We are laborers together with (συνεργοῦντες) God." That which is used is often consumed in the using, or in familiar phrase used up; as, we used twenty tons of coal last winter. In such cases we could not substitute employ. A person may be employed in his own or another's service. In the latter case the service is always understood to be for pay. In this connection employ is a word of more dignity than hire; a general is not said to hire his country's service, a mercenary adventurer is hired to fight a tyrant's battles. It is unsuitable, according to present usage, to speak of hiring the pastor; the Scriptures say, "The laborer is worthy of his hire"; but this sense is archaic, and hire now implies that the one hired works directly and primarily for the pay, as money-making is the motive. "Hiring" a pastor is properly said to be called, or when the business side of the transaction is referred to, engaged, or possibly employed, at a certain salary. Engaged and employed may be said to apply, also, to the more learned professions. — Prep.: employ in, on, upon, or about a work, business, etc.; for a purpose at a stipulated salary.— em-ploy'a-bl(e†, a. Capable of being employed; fit for use.

em-ploy', n. The state of being employed; that in which one is employed; employment; service. [< F. emploi, < employer; see EMPLOY, v.]

The work upon which one is or may be engaged; one's vocation or calling; any particular kind of work; occupation; as, his present employment is that of a compositor; what is your employment. SYN.: see BUSINESS.— common employment (Law), a form of occupation which is shared with another, as in the case of two servants employed by the same master. The phrase is used chiefly in connection with the common law doctrine that the employer is not liable to one servant for the deeds of another. Compare FELLOW SERVANT.

SYN.: accomplishment, achievement, bound, boundary, close, completion, conclusion, consequence, consummation, design, effect, expiration, extent, extremity, finale, finish, fulfilment, intent, issue, limit, outcome, point, purpose, result, termination, terminus, tip, utmost, uttermost.

The end is the terminal point of a material object that has length; the extremity is distinctively the terminal point, and may thus be but part of the end in the general sense of that word; the extremity is viewed as that which is most remote from some center, or some mean or standard position; the southern end of South America includes all Patagonia, the southern extremity or point is Cape Horn. Tip has nearly the same meaning as extremity, but is said of small or slight and tapering objects; as, the tip of the finger: point in such connections is said of that which is drawn out to exceeding tineness or sharpness, as the point of a needle, a fork, or a sword; extremity is said of something considerable; we do not speak of the extremity of a needle. Terminus is chiefly used to designate the end of a line of travel or transportation; specifically, the furthest station in any direction; also, in railway, or by extension the town or village where it is situated. Termination is the Latin and more formal word for the Saxon end, but is chiefly used of words, deeds, undertakings, or abstractions of any kind. Expiration signifies the coming to an end in the natural course of things; as, the expiration of a year, or of a lease; it is used of things of some consequence; we do not ordinarily speak of the expiration of an hour or of a day. Limit implies some check to or restraint upon further advance, habit, or privilege; as, the limits of an estate (compare BOUNDARY). A goal is an end appointed or striven for, as in a race. For the figurative senses of end and its associated words, compare the synonyms for the verb END. See also AIM; CESSATION; CONSEQUENCE; DESIGN.— Ant.: see synonyms for BEGINNING.

en'do-bron-chi'tis, n. Inflammation in the bronchial passages.— en'do-can'ni-bal-ism, n. Anthro. Endophagy.

en'do-car'di-ac, 1 en'do-kär'di-ak; 2 ĕn'dō-cär'dĭ-ăc, a. 1. Situated or being within the heart. 2. Of or pertaining to the endocardium. [< ENDO- + Gr. kardia, heart.]

en'do-car'di-al†,

en"do-car-di'tis, 1 en´do-kar-dī'tıs or -dī'tıs; 2 ĕn´do-kăr-dī'tıs or -dī'tıs, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the endocardium.—infectious or ulcerative endocarditis, endocarditis which follows blood-poisoning, characterized by erosion and injury of the valves.—plastic e., endocarditis with marked plastic effusion, affecting the action of the valves by causing adhesions.—en"do-car-di'tic, a.

en"do-car'di-um, 1 en´do-kar'dı-um; 2 ĕn´do-kăr'dĭ-ŭm, n. Anat. The endothelial lining membrane of the heart. [< ENDO- + Gr. kardia, heart.]

en'do-carp, n. Bot. The inner layer of a pericarp. In some cases it is membranous, in others hard, as in stone-fruits.

—en'do-car'pic, a.—En'do-car'pon, n. pl. -pa. Bot. A small family of angiocarpous lichens with a cellular thallus and apothecia immersed in it. En'do-car'pon, n. (g.) En'do-car'pe-æ, en'do-car'pe-ĭn, a.—en'do-car'poid, a.—En"do-car'pe-æ, n. pl. Zoöph. A section of scleractinates with genital organs derived from the endoderm, including the Zoophytomastus and Asthenia.—en"do-cel'lular, a. Situated inside a cell.—En"do-ce-ra'ti-de, n. pl. Conch. A family of nautiloidean cephalopods with an endosiphon.—En-dec'e-as, n. (g.) —en"do-cer'a-tid, a.—en"do-cer'a-toid, a.—en"do-cer'a-tit'ic, a. Having an endosiphon.—en"do-cer'a-tite, n.—en"do-cer'vi-cal, a. Of or pertaining to the interior of the cervix of the uterus.—en"do-cer'vi-ci'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the mucous membrane of the neck of the womb; cervical endometritis.—en"do-chon'dral, a. Occurring or situated within a cartilage; as, endochondral ossification.—en"do-chone, n. The lunar division of a chone.en"do-cho'na‡.—en"do-cho'ri-on, n. Embryol. The layer of the allantois that lines the chorion.—en"do-chy'ta-ceæ, n. pl. Bot. The coloring-matter of vegetable cells other than green, especially that of algæ. 2. Zoöl. The colored endoplasm of a cell.—en"do-chrome-plate", n. Bot. A strip of brown chromatophores which runs along the girdle side of a diatom.—en-doch'y-tous, a. Containing, in the interior tissue, or chlorenchyma, certain cells for storing water: said of various succulent plants, as the cactus and the live-forever.—en"do-chyme, n. Zoöl. Endoplasm.—en"do-cline, n. Geol. An anticlinal fan fold.—en"do-ce-la'ri-um, n. Zoöl. The inner or true epithelium of the body-cavity or ccelom.—en"do-ce'lar, a.—en"do-ce'le, n. Anat. The primitive investital cavity of an embryo.—en"do-ce-li'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the mucous membrane of the large intestine; dysentery.—en"do-cem'ple-ment, n. Biol. An intracellular complement.—en"do-co"nal, a. Of or pertaining to an endocone.—en"do-cone, n. Conch. One of the internal cones of the siphuncle of shells of certain cephalopods.—en"do-con'ic, a.—en"do-cor'pus'cu-lar, a. Situated inside a corpuscle.—en"do-cor"tex, n. Bot. The inner bark of a tree.—en"do-cra'ni-al, a. 1. Situated within the cranium. 2. Of or pertaining to an endocranium.—en"do-cra-ni'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the dura mater: pachymeningitis.—en"do-cra'ni-um, n. 1. The dura mater. 2. The inner surface of the cranium.en'do-cranc.—en"do-crys-tal'lic, a. Petrog. Pertaining to the influence of stress in the modification of forms of crystals.—en"do-cu'ti-cle-form, a. Same as ENDOCUNEIFORM.—en'do-cy"cle, n. Bot. A wall of parenchymatous tissue which, in the stems of certain plants, divides the internal phloem from the endodermis.—en"do-cy-e-cli'ca, n. pl. Echin. A section or order of echinoderms with the anus central, as in the sea-eggs.—en"do-cyc'tic, a.—en"do-cyc'li-cal, a.—en"do-cyc'lo-mate, a. Entomol. Having the embryo invaginated in the blastodermic vesicle, as an amniote or allantoic vertebrate.—en"do-cy-e'sis, n.—en"do-cyst, n. Helminth. The internal layer of the cercus-cium; the endocerm, same with the mesodermal layer that secretes and lines the cell of a polyzoan.—en"do-cys-ti'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the internal coat of the bladder.

en"do-crine, 1 en´do-krĭn; 2 ĕn´do-krĭn, a. Noting a gland which furnishes an internal secretion. II. n. The internal secretion of a gland. [< ENDO- + Gr. krinō, separate.]—en"do-cri-nol'o-gy, n. That branch of physiology that embraces the study of internal secretions, as through glands. Applied to organs that secrete through ductless glands into the blood or lymph, the substance that secretes or the glands.—en"do-cri'nous, a. Of or relating to an endocrine; as, endocrinous glands, glands which elaborate an internal secretion.

en'do-derm, 1 en´do-dûrm; 2 ĕn´do-dĕrm, n. 1. Embryol. The innermost of the germ-layers of the embryo; hypoblast. From it is developed the epithelium of the alimentary canal and its outgrowths. See GERM-LAYER. 2. Bot. The inner layer or integument of an organism, esp. of a cœlenterate. 3. Bot. The endodermis.

en'to-derm. [< ENDO- + Gr. derma, skin.]—secondary endoderm. Embryol. The functional cellayer of the midgut in several kinds of animals of which the primary endoderm-cells are set free into the yolk at an earlier stage and are vitellophags.—en"do-der'mal. -mic, a.

en"do-der'mis, 1 en´do-dûr'mıs; 2 ĕn´do-dĕr'mıs, n. Bot. A sheath composed of one or more layers of modified parenchymatous cells, which encloses certain fibrovascular bundles.—en"do-der'moid, a.

en"do-der'mi-tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the lining membrane of the pulp-cavity of a tooth.—

en"do-ce'to-thrix, n. That variety of the fungus causing ringworm that grows within and without the hair. Pathol. See ENTOTHRIX.—en"do-en'zym, n. Biol. An enzym or ferment lodged within a cell. en"do-en'zyme‡.

en'dog'a-my, 1 en-dog'a-mı; 2 ĕn-dŏg'a-mı, n. 1. The custom of some uncivilized tribes of marrying only within the tribe or political group. 2. Bot. Fertilization between separate but closely related plants. [< ENDO- + Gr. gamos, marriage.]—en" do-gam'ic, en-dog'a-mous, a.

en"do-gas'tric, a. Of or pertaining to the interior of the abdomen; intra-abdominal.—en"do-gas'tri-cal, a.—en"do-gas'tri-cal-ly, adv.—en"do-gas-tri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the internal membrane of the stomach; gastritis.

en'do-gen, 1 en´do-jen; 2 ĕn´do-gĕn, n. Bot. A plant that increases in size by the intercalation of new cellular and vascular tissues irregularly among that already formed, and not in concentric rings as in exogens; a monocotyledon; an "inside grower," so called. Endogens have no cambium layer or distinction of bark and pith, and are further characterized usually by having a monocotyledonous embryo, ternary arrangement of the flowers, and parallel-veined leaves. [< ENDO- + -GEN.]

en-dog'e-nous, 1 en-doj'ı-nus; 2 ĕn-dŏg'e-nŭs, a. I. Of, pertaining to, or like an endogen; growing from within. 2. Originating or growing within or on the inside of something, as cell-formation in which daughter-cells form within a mother-cell; springing from or being within the interior tissue. 3. Geol. Formed by processes operating in the earth's surface, as by igneous deposition in veins: said of mineral or rock masses: contrasted with exotic and indigenous. Compare these terms.—

en-dog'e-ny, 1 en-doj'ı-nı; 2 ĕn-dŏg'e-nı, n. 1. Growth from within; specif., endogenous cell-formation. 2. Same as ENDOGAMY. [< ENDO- + -GENY.] en"do-gen'e-sis‡.—en"do-ge-net'ic, a. Geol. Having its origin from within; as, endogenetic disease.

en"do-gloi'u-lar, a. Situated within the blood-corpuscles.—en"do-gna'thal, a. Crust. The inner or principal branch of a gnathite or the mouth-like appendage in shell-fish.—en-dog'na-thal, a.—en"dog-na'thi-on, n. [-PHI-A, pl.] The inner one of the two premaxillary bones described by Albrecht on the palate side of the upper jaw. See illus. under INTERMAXILLARY BONE.—en"do-go-nid'i-um, n. Bot. A gonidium formed within a receptacle (gonidangium).—en"do-gra'ha-mus, n. Entom. An inner lobe of the hypopharynx, attached within the labium.—en"do-la-ryn'ge-al, a. Relating to the inside of the larynx.—en"do-lem'ma, n. An inner sheath that surrounds the axis-cylinder in the cell of certain spermatozoa; a neurilemma.—en"do-lith, n. A carving upon marble or ivory in such a manner as to leave the design in colored relief.—en"do-lith'ic-a, n. pl. Protoz. A division of radiolarians with a siliceous skeleton partly within the central capsule.—en"do-lith'ic, a.

en"do-lymph, 1 en´do-limf; 2 ĕn´do-lĭmf, n. Anat. The serous fluid that fills the membranous labyrinth of the ear. [< ENDO- + LYMPH.]—en"do-lym-phan'gi-al, a. Situated within a lymphangium; as, the endolymphangial cell.—en"do-lym'phate, n. Of, pertaining to, or like endolymph.—en"do-lym'phic, a. Of, pertaining to, or like endolymph.

en-dome', 1 en-dōm'; 2 ĕn-dōm', vt. To cover with or as with a dome.

en"do-me'sion, 1 en´do-mē'shan; 2 ĕn´do-mē'shŏn, n. Micros. The placing of an oily liquid between the lenses of an object-glass to remove aberration.

en"do-mes'o-blast, n. The inner layer of an embryo from which will arise by differentiation the definitive endoderm and mesoderm.—en"do-me'tri-al, a. 1. Situated within the womb. 2. Pertaining to the endometrium.—en"do-me-tri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the lining membrane of the womb.—exfoliative endometritis, membranous dysmenorrhea.—hypertrophic endometritis, chronic endometritis, resulting from inflammation.—membranous endometritis, endometritis characterized by the formation of a false membrane.—en"do-me'tri-um, n. The mucous membrane that lines the uterus.—en"do-met'ra‡.—en"do-met'ric, a. Of or for measurement of an interior cavity of the body, as of the cranium.—en"do-morph, n. Mineral. A mineral enclosed within another, as rutile within quartz.—en"do-mor'phic, a.—en"do-mor'phism, n.—en"do-mor'phous, a.—en"do-mor'phy, n. 1. Mineral. Of or pertaining to an endomorph. 2. Petrog. Of or pertaining to endomorphism.—en"do-mor'phism, n. Petrog. Alteration of igneous rock by surrounding rocks upon an intrusive igneous rock.—en"do-mu'si-a, n. Psychol. The mental processes of internal sour or melodic imagery: the colicel after the analogy of endophasia.—En"do-mych'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. The family of clavicorn beetles with 3-jointed tarsi, the second joint dilated, and simple claws; mostly fungivorous; fungus beetles. Endomychus is the type genus.—en-dom'y-choid, a. & n.—en-dom'y-chold, a.—en"do-my"o-car-di'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the muscular tissue of the heart and also the membranes which line it.—en"do-my'si-um, n. Connective tissue between the fibrous bundles of a muscle. See illus. under MUSCLE.—en"do-mys'i-al, a.

en"do-ne-phrit'is, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the lining membrane of the receiving cavity of the kidney and its dilatations; pyelitis.—en"do-neu'ri-um, n. The connective tissue between the fibrils of a nerve. See illus. under NEURILEMMA.—en"do-neu'ral, a.—en"do-nom'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the form of selection determined by the aptitude of a race or species to its surroundings.—en"do-nu-cle'ar, a. Located inside a nucleus, in contradistinction to ectonuclear.—en"do-par'a-site, n. A parasite that lives in the internal parts of the body.—en"do-par'a-sit'ic-al-par'a-sit'ic, a.—en"do-path'ic, a. Med. Originating within the body: applied to diseases; autopathic.—en"do-pel'vic, a. Of, or pertaining to the interior of the pelvis; as, the endopelvic fascia.—en"do-per'i-car-di'tis, n. Med. Inflammation of the lining and enveloping membranes of the heart.—en"do-per'i-car-di'ac, a.—en"do-pe-rid'i-al, a.—en"do-pe-rid'i-um, n. Bot. The inner peridium in the fungi of the genus Geaster.—en"do-per'i-neu-ri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the membranes enveloping the nerve-tissue and nerve-fibers.—en"do-per'i-tho-ne'um, n. The custom of cannibalism within the tribe; the eating of fellow clansmen.—en-doph'a-gous, a.—en"do-pha'si-a, n. Psychol. The internal speech-activity in the mind that exesses which are the mental representatives, or images, of spoken words.—en"do-pha'sic, a.—en"do-phle-bi'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the inner coats of a vein.—en"do-phle-bit'ic, a.—en"do-phlo'ic, a. Of the inner or inner layer of bark in dicotyledons.—en'do-phragm, n. Bot. A partition formed by opposite apodemes.—en"do-pla'ra-mus, n. En"do-plas'ma, n.—endoplasmal system, a species of internal skeleton present in certain crustaceans.—en"do-phyl'lous, a. Bot. Arising from within a sheath, as the first leaves of monocotyledons.—en"do-phyte, n. Bot. A plant living within another organism, usually as a parasite, as certain algæ and fungi. en'to-phyte‡.—en"do-phyt'ic, en"do-phyt'al, a.—en"do-phyt'ic-al-ly, adv.—en-doph'y-tous, a. Entom. Living within wood, as certain larvæ.

en'do-plasm, 1 en´do-plăzm; 2 ĕn´do-plăsm, n. Biol. The granular portion of the fluid interior or plasm of a cell, as of certain rhizopods. [< ENDO- + Gr. plasma; see PLASM.] —en"do-plas'mat‡.—en"do-plas'mic, a.

en"do-plast, 1 en´do-plast; 2 ĕn´do-plăst, n. Bot. The nucleus of a protozoan. [< ENDO- + Gr. plastos, formed, < plassō, form.] —en"do-plas'tic, a. 1. Having an endoplast; of or pertaining to the Endoplastica. 2. Of or pertaining to an endoplast.—En"do-plas'ti-ca, n. pl. Protoz. A section of protozoans with an endoplast or nucleus, including most forms.

en"do-plas'tron, n. Same as ENTOPLASTRON.—en"do-plas'tule, n. The nucleolus of a protozoan.—en"do-plas'tu-lar, a.—en"do-pleu'ra, n. Bot. The innermost integument of a seed.—en"do-pleu'ral, a.—en"do-pleu'rite, n. Crust. The part of an apodeme that arises from an interepimeral membrane.—en"do-pleu-rit'ic, a.—en-dop'o-dite, n. Crust. The mesial or inner branch of the shaft or stem (protopodite) of an appendage. It is variously modified, being when fully developed, found in the thoracic region of a lobster, crab, or other decapod, the ambulatory limb or leg.—en-dop'o-dit'ic, a.—en"do-pneet, n. Helminth. One of the Endopneeta.—En"do-pne'ustæ, n. pl. Zoöl. A subclass, superorder, or other division of polyzoans having the anus within the area of the lophophore and close to the mouth, as in the Pedicellinidæ.—en"do-pro'tein, n.—En"dop-ter'y-go'ta, n. pl. Entom. A superorder of insects with the wings quite invisible externally during development, including all but the lowest orders.—en"dop-ter'y-got, a. & n.—en"dop-ter'y-go'tic, a.—en"dop-ter'y-go-tism, n.—en-dop"ter-yg'o-tous, a.—en-dop'tile, a. Bot. Having the ptimule rolled up in the cotyledon: a proposed substitute for monocotyledonous.

En'dor, 1 en'dôr; 2 ĕn'dōr, n. Bib. 1 Sam. xxvii, 7.

en"do-ra'chis, 1 en´do-rā'kıs; 2 ĕn´do-rā'kĭs, n. Anat. The thin layer of connective tissue that lines the spinal canal. [< ENDO- + Gr. rachis, spine.] en"do-rha'chis‡.

end'or'gan, n. See under END, n.

En"do-rhi'zæ, 1 en´do-rī'zē; 2 ĕn´do-rī'zē, n. pl. The Monocotyledones. [< ENDO- + Gr. rhiza, root.]—en"do-rhi'zal, a. Bot. Having the radicle of the embryo sheathed by the cotyledon, as in many monocotyledons. en"do-rhi'zous‡.

en-dorm', 1 en-dōrm'; 2 ĕn-dōrm', vt. To put into the somnambulistic state or sleep; hypnotize. OCHOROWICZ Mental Suggestion tr. by J. Fitzgerald, p. 10. Lond. 1891.] [< F. endormir, < L. in, in, + dormio, sleep.]

en-dorse', en-dors'a-bi(e), etc. Same as INDORSE, etc., the more approved commercial form. See also note at INDORSE regarding orthography.

en"do-sal'pin-gi'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the inner coat of an oviduct.—en'do-sarc, n. The inner, more liquid, and granular layer of the protoplasm of certain protozoans; endoplasm. en"do-sar'code‡.—en"do-sar'cous, en"do-sar'cous, a.—en"do-scope, n. Med. An instrument for inspecting an internal cavity or hollow organ, especially the womb, rectum, urethra, and bladder.—en"do-scop'ic, a.—en-dos'co-py, n.—en"do-sep'sis, n. A septic condition of an organism due to a toxin generated within it.—en"do-sif'pho-blade", n. Entomol. A transverse ridge on the endosiphuncle in the Endoceratida.—en"do-si'pho-col'e-on, n. A broad flat tube composed of conchiolin present in certain siliurian nautiloid cephalopods.—en"do-si'phon-cone, n. Paleon. The back cone-like portion of the endosiphocylinder of the siphuncle of some of the Endoceratidæ.—en"do-si'pho-cyl'in-der, n. The chalky lining of the front part of the siphuncular tube of the Endoceratida.—en"do-si'phon, n. Conch. An inner siphon in cephalopods.—en"do-si'pho-nal, a.—en"do-si'pho-nate, a. Having an endosiphon.—en"do-si'pho-nic-al, a.—en"do-si'phon-cle, n. Zoöl. The tuner of two siphuncles of certain extinct (nautiloidean) cephalopods.—en"do-si'phu-nate'ly, adv. Lying within the siphuncle.

en-do'sis, 1 en-dō'sıs; 2 ĕn-dō'sĭs, n. Med. A temporary remission of a fever. [< Gr. endosis, < en, in, + didōmi, give.]

en-dos'mic, 1 en-dos'mik; 2 ĕn-dŏs'mĭc, a. Same as EN DOS'MOS-TIC, 1. en-dos'mom'e-ter, 2 ĕn´dŏs'mŏm'e-tĕr, n. An instrument for measuring endosmose. [< END- + Gr. ōsmos, impulsion, + metron, measure.]—en"dos-mo-met'ric, a.

en'dos-mose', 1 en'dos-mōs'; 2 ĕn'dŏs-mōs', n. 1. Osmose in that direction in which the liquid or gas traverses the septum most rapidly. 2. Osmose from an outer vessel to one contained within it. See osmose. [< END- + Gr. ōsmos, impulsion, < ōtheō, push.] en"dos-mo'sis‡.—electric endosmose, the passage of a liquid through a diaphragm from the anode to the cathode in electrolysis.—en"dos-mot'ic, a. Pertaining to endosmose. en-dos'mic‡; en" dos - mo'dic‡; en" dos - mos'mic‡.—endosmotic equivalent, the ratio of the weight of water passing through a membrane into a solution to that of the solution passing in the opposite direction during the same time.—en"dos-mot'ic-al-ly, adv.

en-dos'some, n. Spong. The inner layer of certain sponges, as hexactinellids, consisting of endoderm and mesoderm.—en'do-so"ma, n.—en'do-sperm, n. Bot. The albumen of a seed; the nutritive material surrounding the embryo sac or coarse tissue serving for the early support of the embryo. See PERISPERM.—en"do-sper'mic, a.—en'do-spore, n. 1. Bot. The delicate inner layer of the wall of a spore. Cryptog. 2. Bacteriol. An internal spore or germ-cell developing within a cell: opposed to arthrospore.—en-dos'po-rous, a. Bot. Having spores formed endogenously.

en-dos'te-al, a. Of or pertaining to the bone or ossifying from within the cartilaginous substance. 2. Of or pertaining to the endosteum.—en-dos'te-al-ly, adv.—en"do-ster'nite, n. Crust. The part of an apodeme that rises from the intersternal membrane.—en" do - ster'nal, en"do-ster-nit'ic, a.—en"do-ster'num, n. Same as ENTOSTERNUM.—en-dos'te-um, n. [-TE-A, pl.] 1. Anat. The tissue lining the cavity containing the medullary cavity, etc., of a bone. 2. Cuttlebone.—en"dos-ti'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the endosteum of a bone; osteomyelitis. en-dos"te-i'tis‡.—en-dos'to-ma, n. Cryst. 1. A plate behind each hollow in the labrum. 2. Pathol. A tumor developing from the endosteum.—en'do-stome, n. 1. Bot. (1) The foramen of the inner integument of an ovule. (2) The inner peristome of a moss. 2. An endostoma.—en"do-sto'sis, n. 1. Ossification that takes place between cartilage-cells. 2. The state of having or the formation of an endostoma.—en"do-stra'cal, a.—en'do-style, n. In ascidians, a longitudinal fold of the endoderm of the pharyngeal cavity, projecting into the blood-cavity.—en"do-sty'lic, a.—en"do-the'ca, n. [-CÆ, pl.] Zoöph. 1. The inner hard structures of the wall of the visceral chamber of a coral. 2. The innermost of the tunics of a hydrocaulus or hydrocladium.—en"do-the'cal, a.—en"do-the'cate, a. Having an endotheca.—en"do-the'ci-um, n. Bot. 1. The inner lining of the cell of an anther. 2. The internal lining of the capsule of mosses.—en"do-the'ci-al, a.—en"do-the-is'tic, a. Existing within the nature or being of God. See ENOTHEISTIC.

en"do-the'li-o-ly'sin, n. Chem. A lysin of the group of cytotoxins, capable of destroying the vascular endothelial cells, thus causing extravasation of the blood.—en"do-the"li-o-ly'tic, a.—en"do-the"li-o'ma, n. Pathol. A cancerous growth of the endothelium.—en"do-the"li-o-tox'in, *n. en-dur'ance, 1 en-diū'rans; 2 ɛn-dū'rans, n. 1. The capacity or power to endure; ability to suffer pain, distress, hardship, or any very prolonged stress without succumbing; patient fortitude; also, the act or experience of enduring; the endurance of the Roman soldier. 2. The ability to bear and continue in spite of destructive forces; continuing power, as that of wood or iron, under severe strain or exposure; durability. 3. Continuation in time; duration. 4†. Delay. Syn.: see FORTITUDE; PATIENCE.

en-dure', 1 en-diūr'; 2 ɛn-dūr', v. [EN-DURED'; EN-DUR'ING.] I. t. 1. To suffer or bear the test of without injury or giving way; to withstand; as, the rope could not endure the strain. 2. To experience or sustain with a sense of distress and strain; bear painfully; undergo.

Hoon Hero and Leander, st. 129.

3. To suffer patiently; submit to without resistance; undergo; tolerate; as, I endured great hardship. 4†. To indurate; toughen. 5†. To cause to last; preserve. II. i. 1. To have duration; continue; last; remain; as, the word of God endureth forever.

Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Ps. xxx, 5.

2. To be firm and steadfast in trial; suffer without yielding; hold out; bear; as, learn to endure while young.

Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong in the day that he shall deal in judgment with thee?
BURNET Holy War p. 110. [p. & c.]

3†. To become indurated. [< F. endurer, < L. in-duro, harden, < in, in, + duro, hard.]—en-dur'er, n.

Syn.: abide, afford, allow, bear, brook, permit, put up with, submit to, suffer, support, sustain, tolerate. Bear is the most general of these words; it is metaphorically to hold up or keep up a burden or care, pain, grief, annoyance, or the like, without sinking, lamenting, or repining. Allow and permit involve large concession of the will: put up with and tolerate imply decided aversion and reluctant withholding of opposition or interference; whispering is allowed by the school-teacher who does not forbid nor censure it; one puts up with the presence of a disagreeable visitor; a state tolerates a religion which it would be glad to suppress. Endure is nearer to the latter than to the former sense. To endure is to bear with strain and resistance, but with conscious power. One may choose to endure the pain of a surgical operation rather than take anesthetics; he permits the thing to come which he must brace himself to endure when it comes. To brook is to be equal to a painful demand. To brook is quietly to put up with provocation or insult. Abide combines the senses of await and endure: as, I will abide the result. See ABIDE; BEAR; PERMIT. Ant.: break, break down, droop, fail, faint, falter, give out, give up, sink, succumb.

en-dur'ing, 1 en-diūr'iŋ; 2 ɛn-dūr'iŋ, pa. Having or showing fortitude; long-suffering; lasting; long-continuing; as, enduring beauty; enduring patience. en-dur'ant†. Syn.: see CHANGELESS; PERMANENT; PERSISTENT.—en-dur'ingly, adv.—en-dur'ing-ness, n.

en'er-gēs, 1 en'ar-jiz; 2 ɛn'ɛr-jēz, n. [-GIZES, 1 -ji-z; 2 -ji-z, pl.] 1. The power by which anything acts effectively to move or change other things or accomplish any result; that quality by reason of which anything tends to move or act; force; potency; as, the energy of nature; mental energy. 2. Habitual tendency to and readiness for effective action; intensity and forcefulness in spirit or conduct; vigor; efficiency.

Energy in government is essential to . . . security against external and internal dangers. The Federalist No. xxxvii. p. 163.

3. Power in active exercise; force in operation; vigorous and effective action; as, a great destructive energy.

Physics. Capacity for performing mechanical work. See WORK.

The physical quantities called forms of energy exist in such relation that no one of them can ever be increased or diminished except at the expense of one or more of the others. Chief among these quantities are: (1) active, kinetic, or motive energy, belonging to every body in motion, and equal to the product of half its mass into the square of its velocity; (2) potential energy, determined by the relative condition of the parts of a body, or the relative positions of bodies acting on each other, and such that every change in that state or position absorbs or evolves a definite amount of energy in some other form; (3) heat; and (4) electric energy. Heat is believed to be a form of molecular kinetic energy, and electric energy is thought to exist in both kinetic and potential forms.

An example of the transformation of one of these forms into others is afforded by the operations which result in the motion of a streetcar by a storage-battery. In a pound of coal, as related to the oxygen of the air, we conceive that a quantity of potential energy which, changed into heat, would raise 80 pounds of water from the freezing- to the boiling-point, and which, as kinetic energy, would give a mass of 80 pounds a velocity of 2,800 feet per second. When this energy is evolved in the form of heat under the boiler of a steam-engine, a large part of the kinetic energy of the heat disappears and is replaced by electricity. The electricity disappears in the act of charging the storage-battery, where it takes another form of potential energy. This is again expended in reproducing the electricity, which again disappears in moving the car, but reappears in the form of heat generated by the friction of the car-wheels. The quantity of heat which is thus produced, combined with that generated on the various conducting wires, is exactly the quantity that disappeared in the engine driving the dynamo. SIMON NEWCOMB.

5. Rhet. That objective property of style by means of which a thought is forcibly or vividly impressed on the hearer's mind. It is (1) proper when the sentiment is accordance with the other properties (see STYLE), and (2) figurative by deviation from them. 6. In Aristotle's philosophy, actuality; reality. Compare DYNAMIS. [< F. energie, < L. energia, < Gr. energeia, < energos, at work, < en, in, + ergon, work.] Syn.: see POWER.—available energy, in a thermodynamic system, the energy which can be used for mechanical work.—degradation or dissipation of e. (Physics), the change of energy into a nonavailable form, as from mechanical energy to useless heat by friction, or from high temperature heat to low temperature heat by radiation or the like: a process continually going on in nature. Compare ENTROPY.—e. of rotation (Physics), in a rotating body, the work or motion necessary to give it its rotation. It is equal to one-half the angular velocity of the body multiplied by its moment of inertia.—e. surface (Physics), a thermodynamic surface representing energy in terms of volume and entropy. Compare ENTROPY.—factors of e. (Physics), two factors one of which determines the direction of transfer of energy to a body (the intensity factor) while the other (the capacity factor) must be multiplied into it to define the total energy. In the case of heat-energy the former depends on temperature, the latter on mass.—free e. (Physics), the part of a system's energy that determines by its diminution the maximum work it can do on external bodies: so called by Helmholtz.—intra-atomic e. (Physics), the energy associated within the atom itself, which is set loose when the atom is split up, and is the cause of radioactivity and kindred energies. Compare RADIOACTIVE.—radiant e., energy transmitted through or by the ether, as light, radiant heat, or electromagnetic radiation.

Swearing is for the most part a mere rhetorical enforcement a system of interjections, in the phraseology of exaggeration. H. W. BEECHER Norwood p. 372. [s.]

3. [Archaic.] Compulsion; coercion; as, I will submit only upon enforcement. [OF. < enforcer; see ENFORCE.]

— Enforcement Act, an act of the United States Congress to enforce (1) the execution of the Embargo Act of 1807, which was artfully evaded; (2) the recognition of rights guaranteed by the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution. [or declare to be a forest; afforest.

en-for'est, 1 en-for'est; 2 ĕn-fŏr'ĕst, vt. To make into

en-for'tune†, vt. To endow with a quality or property.

en-foul'dered†, a. Mixed with lightning. [a frame.

en-frame', 1 en-frām'; 2 ĕn-frām', vt. To enclose in or as in en-fran'chise, 1 en-fran'chiz or -chīz; 2 ĕn-fran'chĭs or -chīz, vt. [-CHISED; -CHIS-ING.] 1. To endow with a franchise or political privilege, especially with the right to vote; free from political disabilities; invest with a citizen's or a freeman's rights; also, to admit to the rights and privileges of a municipal or other corporation. 2. To set free, as from bondage, vassalage, or subjection; release.

You tread upon ground bought with hardships, tears, and prayers; enfranchised by toil and blood.
MARK TWAIN Tramp Abroad's Journal p. 388. [s. & CO. 1873.]

3. Eng. Law. (1) To make (one born an alien) a citizen of England by royal charter. (2) To give (a designated constituency) the right of representation in Parliament. (3) To convert (a copyhold estate) into a freehold, either by payment of money in gross to the lord of the manor or by settling a fixed annual rent-charge on the lands enfranchised. 4. To naturalize or adopt, as foreign words. < OF. enfranchissant, ppr. of enfranchir, < en, EN-1; and see FRANCHISE.] en-fran'chiz†; en-fran'chizef.— en-fran'chis-a-ble, a.

en-fran'chise-ment, 1 en-fran'chiz-ment or -ment; 2 ĕn-fran'chĭs-ment, n. 1. The act of enfranchising, or the state of being enfranchised; admission to citizenship, including political freedom and civil capacity; investiture with the privileges of a citizen. 2. The freeing of a bondman. 3. Formerly, admission to the freedom of a city. 4. The conversion of an estate by copyhold into a freehold.

en-frangi'ble‡ a. [RARE.] Laden; charged; filled.

en-free'†, vt. To set free. en-free'dom†.

eng, 1 ng; 2 ĕng, n. [Ind.] The strong, heavy, useful wood of an East-Indian tree (Dipterocarpus grandiflorus).

Eng., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

En-ga'di, 1 en-gā'dī; 2 ĕn-gā'dĭ, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). Ecclus. XXIV, 14.

En'ga-dine', 1 en'gā-dīn'; 2 ĕn'gā-dīn', n. The valley of the Inn river in the Swiss Alps; it is 45 m. long, is divided into Upper and Lower, and is a resort for tourists and invalids.

en-gage', 1 en-gēj'; 2 ĕn-gāj', v. [EN-GAGED'; EN-GAG'ING.] I. t. 1. To bind by promise, pledge, oath, or the like; obligate to do or not to do; put under contract; pledge; specifically, to betroth; promise in marriage, usually with reflexive or personal pronoun as object; as, to engage one's word; she engaged herself to him. 2. To obtain a promise of the use or services of; procure or secure for some special purpose, as labor, aid, etc.; make a contract or bargain for; order; hire; enlist; as, to engage a lawyer, or his services; to engage supplies. 3. To draw out and secure; attract; win over; as, to engage one's affection. 4. To hold the interest or attention of; occupy or engross; employ the time of; as, to engage one's thoughts or attention in art. 5. To join in conflict with; enter into contest with; encounter in battle; as, to engage a hostile army.

It seems that it was no part of Hannibal's plan to engage the Romans whenever he might meet with them.
CHAS. MERIVALE Rome p. 135. [D. 1870.]

6. Mech. To mesh or gear with; interlock; as, the gear engages the engage with the teeth of the rack; pawn. 8. To entangle or involve; interlace; fasten. 9. [Archaic.] To urge or induce; persuade. 10. Arch. To fasten; attach. See ENGAGED, pa., 4.

II. i. 1. To bind oneself by pledge or promise; take an obligation; enter into a contract; promise.

They . . . engaged, verbally or by writing, to assemble in arms at the shortest notice.
IRVING Washington vol. i. p. 384. [G. P. P. 1853.]

2. To busy oneself; be occupied or devoted; take part; as, to engage in trade. 3. To begin or maintain a conflict; join battle; as, to engage with the infantry. 4. Mech. To mesh. 5. In fencing, to cross swords with an adversary and so press against his weapon as to prevent him from maneuvering, so as to take one unawares. 6. Obstet. To descend into the pelvic cavity: of the fetus. [< F. engager, < LL. invadio, < L. in, in, + LL. vadium, < Goth. wadi, pledge.] in-gage'†. SYN.: see BIND; INTEREST; OCCUPY; RETAIN. — PREP.: engage in a business; engage to a master or employer; pledge to an occasion or a date; engage (become surety) for one's honesty; be engaged to a person.— en'ga-gee'†, n. One who is engaged or hired.

en-gage', n. Fencing. The preliminary position or movement in which the adversaries' foils are crossed.

en-gaged', 1 en-gējd'; 2 ĕn-gājd', pa. 1. Promised in marriage; affianced; betrothed; as, an engaged maiden. 2. Occupied or busy; without leisure; as, I am engaged every morning. 3. [Archaic.] Mortgaged or pawned. 4. Arch. Partially sunk or built into another part of a structure or as if appearing to be, as an engaged column. 5. Mech. (1) Geared together; interlocked. (2) Driven by gearing: said of a driven wheel. 6. Involved in a contest or conflict; as, the engaged armies were evenly matched. SYN.: see BUSY. — PREP.: engaged to a lover; with a client; to an accepted suitor.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

en-gage'ment, 1 en-gēj'ment or -mant; 2 ĕn-gāj'ment, n. 1. The act of engaging, in any sense.

When the Lowell course was here to deliver his lectures in the Lowell course he recommended the engagement of Agassiz, then a young man and almost unknown to the world of science.
HOLMES Emerson p. 140. [H. & B. 1885.]

2. The condition, or state of being engaged; especially, a betrothal; as, the engagement of a young couple.

3. A battle or conflict; a contest which one may be free to keep or to break, but which involves all the capital of the other.
THACKERAY Vanity Fair vol. i. p. 188. [L. 1879.]

3. Something that engages or binds; a promise; agreement; contract; obligation.

Should it become inevitably necessary for me to go into the chair of government, I have determined to go free from all positive engagements of every kind whatever. WASHINGTON in Sparks's Writings of Washington vol. ix. p. 478. [L. & c. & CO. 1835.]

4. Mil. An entering into or being in conflict; combat; encounter. Thus the battle of Bull Run was a great engagement. 5. [Archaic.] Employment; occupation.

en-gag'ing, 1 en-gēj'ing; 2 ĕn-gāj'ĭng, pa. Attracting interest or affection; winning; attractive; as, engaging manners. SYN.: see AMIABLE; ATTRACTIVE.— en-gag'ing-ly, adv.— en-gag'ing-ness, n.

En-gan'nim, 1 en-gan'im; 2 ĕn-găn'ĭm, n. Bib. Josh. xv,

en-garb', 1 en-gārb'; 2 ĕn-gārb', vt. To array in garments; en-gar'land, 1 en-gār'land; 2 ĕn-gār'land, vt. To encircle with or as with garlands; wreathe.

en-gar'tl-son, 1 en-gar'i-sn; 2 ĕn-gar'ĭ-sn, vt. To supply with a garrison; protect by or as by a garrison.

en-gas'tri-ous, 1 en-gas'tri-us; 2 ĕn-găs'trĭ-ŭs, n. [-I, 1-ci; 2-I, pl.] Teral. A double monster consisting of an individual enclosed within the ventral cavity of another. [< EN-1 + Gr. gastēr, belly.]

En-ge'di, 1 en-gē'dī or en'gi-dī; 2 ĕn-gē'dĭ or ĕn'gĕ-dī, n. Bib. Josh. XV, 62.

Eng'el, 1 eg'el; 2 ĕng'ĕl, n. 1. Ernst (3/25 1821–83/4 1896), a German statesman; author of Engel's law, a statement that with every increase in wages a decreased percentage is required for food. 2. Johann Jakob (6/7 1741–2/23 1802), a German dramatist, novelist and philosopher.

Eng'el-brēt'sen, 1 eg'el-brent'sen; 2 ĕng'ĕl-brĕnt'sĕn, Cornelis (1468–1533), a Dutch painter; one of the first to use oil-colors. Eng'hel-brecht'sen‡.

En'gel-mann, n. 1 eg'el-man; 2 ĕg'ĕl-măn. 1. George (3/4 1809–5/11 1884), a German-American botanist and writer, commemorated in the name of a valuable American spruce. SEE SPRUCE. 2. 1 gō'zel'mōn'; 2 gō'zhĕl'mĭn'. Godefroy (5/19 1788–1/21 1839), a progressive French lithographer.

en-gem', 1 en-jem'; 2 ĕn-jĕm', vt. To adorn or set with or as with gems; begem. in-gem'‡.

en-gen'der, 1 en-jen'dur; 2 ĕn-gĕn'dĕr, v. I. t. 1. To bring into existence; cause to exist; bring forth; produce; as, to engender hatred. 2. [Rare.] To beget; generate. II. i. 1. To come into being; be produced. 2. To come together, as in sexual intercourse. [< F. engendrer, < L. ingenero, < in, in; and see GENDER, v.] — SYN.: see PRODUCE; PROPAGATE.— -er, n.— -ment, n.

en-geo'dure, 1 en-jen'dur; 2 ĕn-jē'dŭr, n. [Archaic.] The act of engendering; procreation; begetting; birth; origin.

2†. Parentage; lineage. — en-gen'dure‡.

En'ghien', 1 ŏn'gāN'; 2 ăN'gĭăN', Duc d' (8/2 1772–3/21 1804), Louis A. H. de Bourbon, a French prince who fought against the republic; settled in Germany, was seized by order of Napoleon, summarily tried, and shot at Vincennes.

en-gi', 1 en'ji; 2 ĕn'jĭ, n. [Burmese.] The silk or colored stuff, usually of mixed silk and cotton, worn by Burmese women.

PALMER Up and Down the Irrawaddi p. 205. [D. & CO. 1859.]

en'gine, 1 en'jin; 2 ĕn'jĭn, vt. [EN'GINED; EN'GIN-ING.]

en'gin‡, 1 en'jin; 2 ĕn'jĭn, vt. To furnish with an engine; as, the cruiser was engined at the navy-yard. 2†. To use engines of war against. 3†. To torture; rack. 4†. To contrive.

en'gine, n. 1. A machine by which power is applied to the doing of work, particularly one that converts

Motive-power engines are named (1) from the motive fluid or agent employed: as, aero-steam engine, air-e. (driven by hot or compressed air), alcohol-e., ammonia or ammoniacal e., atmospheric e. (using atmospheric pressure), caloric e. (hot air), carbonic-acid e., compressed-air e., ether-e., gas-e., gasoline-e., gunpowder-e., hot-air e., hot-water e., hydraulic e., hydrocarbon-e., oil-e., steam-e., water-e. etc. (using the heat of the sun), steam-e., vapor-e. (using a combustible vapor); (2) from the duty or function performed by them, or the thing with which they are connected: as, assistant or auxiliary e., ballast-e. (digging or hauling railway ballast), blowing-e., draft-e. (for hoisting in mines), draining-e. (for pumping out overflowed areas, etc.), elevator-e., fan-e., feeding-e. (for feeding water to a boiler), freight-e., goods-e. (English for a freight-engine), hoisting-e., launch-e., locomotive-e., marine e., mining-e., passenger-e. (for drawing passenger-cars), pile-e. (a steam pile-driver), pilot-e. (a locomotive piloting a train, etc.), propeller-e., pumping-e., starting-e. (a small engine for starting a larger), supplementary e., switching-e. or shunting-e. (for moving cars about in a railway yard), traction-e. (for use other than on railways), winding-e., yard-e. (for moving cars); (3) from their mechanism, construction, or principal feature or attachment: as, annular or annular-cylinder e., automatic e. (self-regulating as to speed or power), beam-e. or balanced e. (having one reciprocating parts which balance), balance-valve e., balance-wheel e., bogie-e. (see BOGIE), breast-wheel e. (operated by the impingement of the motive fluid above the center of a wheel), concentric e. (rotary), cross-compound e. (a compound engine having its cylinders side by side), cutoff e. (in which the steam is cut off by the valve before the end of the stroke), direct-acting or direct-action e. (having no beam), disk-e. (having an oscillating disk against which the motive fluid acts), double or double-cylinder e., double-acting e. (in which the steam works on both sides of a reciprocating piston), double piston-rod e. (direct-acting), duplex e., duplex-cylinder e., grasshopper e. (having long jointed beams like grasshoppers' legs), hog-e. (a heavy switching engine with small driver), horizontal e. (having horizontal piston motion, see illus.), inclined e. or inverted e. (having the cylinder above the shaft and the stuffing-box on the lower head), lever-e. (a modification of the beam-engine), multicylinder e., noncondensative e. (having no fly-wheel), oscillating e. (having oscillating cylinders), outside-connected e. (a locomotive having connections outside the frames), overhead e. (inverted), pendulous or pendulum-cylinder e. (inverted and oscillating), quadrant-e. (having a piston vibrating in a quadrantal chamber), reciprocating e. (in which the piston has a to-and-fro motion), reversible or reversing e., rotary e. (having one or more pistons rotating in the cylinder), rotative or rotatory e. (having rotating crank and reciprocating piston), self-contained e. (having engine and boiler in one, or having foundation-plate and housings in one), side-beam or side-lever e., single-acting e. (having a piston on only one side of which the motive fluid acts), spiral-vane e. (having rotating pistons with spiral flanges), steeple-e. (having the cylinders inclined and the pistons operating on a common crank shaft), three-cylinder e., twin-e. (two engines coupled so as to work as one), twin-screw e., upright e., vertical e., and V-e. (4) from the manner in which they use the motive fluid: as, condensing e. (producing a partial vacuum on the exhaust side of the piston, by cooling or condensing the exhaust motive fluid), expansion-e. (cutting off the motive fluid before the end of the stroke), high-pressure e. (non-condensing), low-pressure e. (condensing), double, triple, quadruple, quintuple, multiple, expanston e. (expanding the motive fluid in two or more successive cylinders or sets of cylinders). reaction-e., series-expansion e. (expanding the motive fluid in two or more successive cylinders or sets of cylinders). For other types see below.

a, a, secondary connecting rods; b, tire fluid in two, safety-valves; c, ball bearings; d, piston; three, etc., successive e, automatic admission-valve; f, main cylinders or sets of cylinders; g, reaction

5. A locomotive; taken as a whole. 3. An elaborate and complete machine for doing intricate and superior work; as, a graduation-engine; rose-engine. 4. Any large instrument or material contrivance for producing some effect, especially of destruction or distintegration; as, an engine of war or of torture; pulp-engine. 5. A dredge; as, a ballast-engine; specif., in the Mediterranean coral-fishery, a float, supporting swab-like drags of rope netting, which tear the coral from the bottom. 6. Any agency or instrumentality employed. 7†. A trap or snare; plot. 8†. Natural talent; ingenuity; skill; also, temperament; mental tendency. [< F. engin, < L. ingenium, < in, in, + gignō, produce.] — agricultural engine, a portable steam-engine for driving farm machinery, winding the ropes of power-plows, etc. — binary e., a steam-engine in which the exhaust from one cylinder volatilizes a fluid which drives another cylinder. — black e., an engine having its parts unturned or unpainted, wherever possible, as distinguished from a bright engine, similar parts of which are highly finished. — camel-back e., a locomotive in which the cab is in front of the fire-box, thus giving the effect of a came 's hump. — central-valve e., an engine with openings in the hollow piston-rod which act as distributors of the working fluid (usually gas) to cylinders by the working of a piston-valve in therod. — closed-heat e. (Mech.), an air-engine in which a single charge of air is successively compressed, heated, expanded in the cylinder, and cooled, only to pass through the same cycle again. — coal-dust e., an internal-combu-tion engine in which the fuel is hydrocarbon gas vaporized from coal-dust. — compound e., a steam-engine in which the exhaust-steam from one or more cylinders enters and does work in one or more other cylinders, e. g., is expanded again by passage from a high-pressure into a low-pressure cylinder. — compression-e., n. A gas-engine, the charge of which is first compressed and then ignited. — Corliss e., an automatic drop cut-off steam-engine having four plug-valves driven from a wrist-plate. — Cornish e., a simple and economical single-acting condensing beam-engine for pumping, largely used in the Cornish mines. — coupled e. [e. being comprising two or more cylinders acting on a common crank. 2. A locomotive with two or more driving-wheels at each side coupled together. — cycle e., an engine in which the motive fluid undergoes a cycle of operations such as admission, compression, ignition, expansion, exhaust, etc. — cycloidal e., a geometric lathe or rose-engine. — e-cutter, n. a paper-making machine in which the pulp is taken up on, and delivered in a web by, a cylinder. — dental e., a rapidly rotating apparatus for drilling, excavating, and cleaning teeth. — diagonal e., an engine with two cylinders set in an inclined position and connected with a common crank; a steeple-engine. — Diesel engine, an internal combustion engine, invented by Rudolph Diesel of Munich, Germany, in which the crude oil, used as fuel, is ignited by the heat resulting from the high compression of air drawn to the cylinder. — electrodynamic or electromagnetic e., a electric motor. — engine-bear"er, n. One of the strong timbers or girders framed into the bottom of a steam-vessel, and on which the engine rests and is secured. — e-counter, n. A device for indicating the speed of machinery. — e-cycle, n. A complete round of operations in an engine-cylinder. In a gas-engine this would consist of suction, admission, compression, combustion or expansion, and exhaust. — e-driver, n. [Eng.] The engineer of a locomotive. — e-frame, n. The main supporting structure of an engine. — e-house, n. A building in which locomotives are kept, or in which one or more stationary engines are operated. — e-keelson, n. An engine-bearer. — e-lathe, n. A large and complete lathe, adapted to screw-cutting. — engine-man, n. One who manages an engine. — e-pit, n. A pit dug to a depth of about three feet between the rails of a track to enable workmen to clean or repair the under part of locomotives. — e-plane, n. A roadway in a coal-mine over which coal is drawn by means of an endless rope or chain worked by an engine. — e-runner, n. One who runs an engine; particularly, a locomotive-engineer. — e-sized, a. Sized by machinery: said of paper. — e-speed, n. The accomplishment or work of an engine, measured by the number of revolutions of its fly-wheel, or the feet traveled by its piston-rod per minute. — e-stop, n. An emergency stopping device for engines. — e-telegraph, n. An electrical or mechanical signaling system used on steamships to convey orders from the bridge to the engine-room. — e-tool, n. [Rare.] See MACHINE-TOOL. — e-turning, n. The cutting of a design on a rose-engine, or the design so executed. — engine-wright, n. [Eng.] A builder and erecter of engines: not now used. — explosion e., an engine in which the charge in the cylinder is detonated; sometimes incorrectly used to denote an internal-combustion engine in which the charge is burned, but not exploded. — external-combustion e., an engine, such as the steam-engine, in which the fuel is not burned in the cylinder. Compare INTERNAL-COMBUSTION e., n. A type of internal-combustion engine in which a fixed gas is used. See INTERNAL-COMBUSTION n. 2. An internal-combustion engine. — Gorgon e., a direct-acting beamless vertical marine engine having its piston-rod guided by a parallel motion attached to the head of the connecting-rod. — hydro-oil e., an internal-combustion engine in which crude oil is used for fuel. Water is mixed with the oil and serves to absorb heat, obviating danger of premature combustion during compression. — inside-connected e., a locomotive of the type common in England in which the cylinders are located between the driving-wheels. — internal-combustion e., an engine which obtains its power by the combustion or explosion of fuel in the cylinder. The gas employed may be mixed gas, or the vapor derived from ether, alcohol, gasoline, petroleum oils, naphtha, etc. These engines are divided into three classes: (1) Gas-engines, those in which fixed gases, such as producer gas, are used: usually stationary. (2) Oil-engines, those using oil, either in the form of a spray or the vapor given off when the oil is heated: usually stationary. (3) Engines in which is used the vapor or gasoline or other volatile liquids: used on automobiles, launches, etc. In these three classes of engines, the air and gases in the cylinder are compressed and then exploded by a direct flame (oil-type), a hot tube, or an electric spark, the cylinder being either air- or water-cooled. See COAL-DUST n., COMPRESSION n., CYCLE n., EXPLOSION n., HYDRO-OIL n., LIQUID-FUEL n., THERMODYNAMIC n., etc. — inverted-cylinder e., an engine with vertical cylinders superposed above the crank-shaft; a marine engine. — Jordan e., an engine for cutting or reducing wood, consisting of a cylinder fitted within another, both armed with knives for cutting pulp: named after Joseph Jordan. — light e., a locomotive running without a train. — liquid-fuel e., an engine of the internal-combustion type in which the fuel used is liquid rather than a gas or solid. — nigger e., a cheap common engine of simple construction for rough work, usually a black engine. — oscillating e., an engine in which the piston-rod exhausts into the air. — pony e., a small locomotive usually employed in switching. — quarter-crank e., an engine with two cranks set at right angles to each other, for rotative motive. — radial e., a multicylinder internal combustion engine having its cylinders arranged like the spokes in a wheel. The pistons of these six-cylinder engines in the form of semicircle it is termed a semiradial e.— refining e., in paper-making, an engine used for reducing the raw material to a fine pulp. — rope-driving e., an engine in which motion is transmitted by a rope. — rolling-mill e., an engine, used in connection with any form of rolling-mill, which is reversible, so that the material may be passed through the rolls back and forth. — saddle-tank e., see SADDLE-TANK LOCOMOTIVE. — simple e., an engine in which the steam undergoes a single expansion, as distinguished from a compound engine. — solar e., a steam-engine employing the heat of the sun's rays concentrated by lenses and reflectors, to form the steam. — spherical e., a rotary engine of spherical form. — square e. [e. being comprising two or more cylinders acting on a common crank. 2. A locomotive with the cab is in front of the fire-box, thus giving the effect of a came 's hump. — central-valve e., an engine with openings in the hollow piston-rod which act as distributors of the working fluid (usually gas) to cylinders by the working of a piston-valve in therod. — closed-heat e. (Mech.), an air-engine in which a single charge of air is successively compressed, heated, expanded in the cylinder, and cooled, only to pass through the same cycle again. — coal-dust e., an internal-combu-tion engine in which the fuel is hydrocarbon gas vaporized from coal-dust. — compound e., a steam-engine in which the exhaust-steam from one or more cylinders enters and does work in one or more other cylinders, e. g., is expanded again by passage from a high-pressure into a low-pressure cylinder. — compression-e., n. A gas-engine, the charge of which is first compressed and then ignited. — Corliss e., an automatic drop cut-off steam-engine having four plug-valves driven from a wrist-plate. — Cornish e., a simple and economical single-acting condensing beam-engine for pumping, largely used in the Cornish mines. — coupled e. [e. being comprising two or more cylinders acting on a common crank. 2. A locomotive with two or more driving-wheels at each side coupled together. — cycle e., an engine in which the motive fluid undergoes a cycle of operations such as admission, compression, ignition, expansion, exhaust, etc. — cycloidal e., a geometric lathe or rose-engine. — e-cutter, n. a paper-making machine in which the pulp is taken up on, and delivered in a web by, a cylinder. — dental e., a rapidly rotating apparatus for drilling, excavating, and cleaning teeth. — diagonal e., an engine with two cylinders set in an inclined position and connected with a common crank; a steeple-engine. — Diesel engine, an internal combustion engine, invented by Rudolph Diesel of Munich, Germany, in which the crude oil, used as fuel, is ignited by the heat resulting from the high compression of air drawn to the cylinder. — electrodynamic or electromagnetic e., a electric motor. — engine-bear"er, n. One of the strong timbers or girders framed into the bottom of a steam-vessel, and on which the engine rests and is secured. — e-counter, n. A device for indicating the speed of machinery. — e-cycle, n. A complete round of operations in an engine-cylinder. En'glish, n. 1. pl. Ethnol. The natives of England; also, the people of the English race collectively, especially those of Anglo-Saxon origin. 2. (1) The language of England, or of the English peoples, wherever spoken; as in the United States, most of the British possessions, Liberia, etc.

In this sense there are four periods of the history of the English language: (a) The period from the earliest Teutonic speech in England, A. D. 450 to A. D. 1150, the Anglo-Saxon period, lately often called Old English, Oldest E. This was the period of full inflection. (b) The period from A. D. 1150 to A. D. 1350, called Early E., during which the inflections were broken up (1150–1250), and large numbers of French words were introduced into the language (1250–1350). (c) The period from 1350 to 1485, the Chaucer period, the Old E. of literature, now often called Middle E., in which the Saxon and Norman elements were shaped into a new literary language. (d) The period since 1485, called Modern E., of which the period from 1485 to 1611 is called Tudor E. See ANGLO-SAXON; LANGUAGE. (2) The cultivated mixed speech of the English since the beginning of the Chaucer period, 1350.

> The English was seldom written and hardly employed in prose till after the middle of the fourteenth century. Sir John Mandeville's travels were written in 1356. This is our earliest English book. HALLAM Lit. Europe vol. i, p. 47. [H. 1854.]

3. An English rendering or equivalent; as, "John" is the English of the French "Jean." 4. Print. (1) A size of type between pica and great primer: about 14 points. (2) A type-face resembling German text: more commonly called Old English. 5. Billiards. A horizontal twist or spin given to the cue-ball by striking it on one side: by the British called side.— book English, the English of literature as distinguished from that of conversation.— direct E. (Billiards), rotation of the cue-ball from left to right and tendency to glance from an object-ball, or a cushion, at a broad angle, produced by striking the cue-ball on the left of the center.— E. disease, rickets.— E. land, or pale. See PALE, n.— En'glish-speak"ing, a. Using the English language; characterizing those persons or peoples who speak English without belonging to the English nation.— plain E., a direct, simple statement; as, the plain English of it is this.— reverse E. (Billiards), rotation of the cue-ball from right to left, opposite to "direct English," produced by striking the cue-ball on the right of the center. — the king's or queen's E., pure or correct English.— to murder the king's or queen's E., to speak or write ungrammatically.— En'glish-ly, adn.

2. To carve figures or inscriptions upon; as, to engrave plate; to engrave a monumental tablet. 3†. To sculpture, as figures. II. i. To be adapted to the engraving process. [< F. engraver, < en (< L. in), in, + graver, < LL. gravo, grave.] Syn.: see INSCRIBE.— Prep.: engrave on or upon a stone, a seal, etc.; also in or on or upon metal or wood; with a tool; engrave a stone with a name (Ex. xxviii, 11); engrave in or on the mind; on the heart; on the memory.

en-graved', 1 en-grēvd'; 2 ĕn-grāvd', pa. Zool. Having a surface marked with lines.

en-grave'ment, 1 en-grēv'ment or -mənt; 2 ĕn-grāv'ment, n. 1. The act of engraving, or the state of being engraved. 2†. An engraving.

en-grav'er, 1 en-grēv'ər; 2 ĕn-grāv'er, n. 1. A person who engraves; one whose occupation is to make engravings, particularly on wood or metal. 2. An engraver-beetle. 3. [Rare.] An engravers' tool; a graver. — engravers' metal, an alloy of tin, antimony, and lead on which an engraving can be readily cut: used for color-work.

en-grav'ing, 1 en-grēv'ıŋ; 2 ĕn-grāv'ing, n. 1. The act, process, or art of producing by cutting, on metal, stone, or wood, either incised or relief designs, as for ornamentation or printing. Wood-engraving for printing purposes flourished in the 15th century, when the engraving was done by the artists themselves. Metal-e. began in the early Renaissance. In wood-e., the design is drawn on or transferred to a boxwood block and the wood cut away, leaving the lines and spots, which constitute the design, standing in relief. In criblé e., used in the 15th century, and to some extent today for astronomical plates, the wooden block is engraved with small holes instead of lines, thus producing light and shade by a series of white spots. There are several methods of metal-e., as: (1) Line-e., which includes engraving on copper or steel plates. The incisions are produced in a plate by using a burin or dry-point. When the design is completed the burr is scraped off and the surface burnished. As the design is cut in the metal, the print produced is the result of the ink retained in the cavities. This process has been superseded by etching, but it is still used for bank-notes, stock-certificates, etc. See ETCHING. That branch of engraving in which the burin is used exclusively, and not the dry-point, is called also line-engraving. (2) Mezzotint e. or mezzotinto, a process in which the copper plate is indented or roughened over the whole surface by an instrument called a "cradle." The barb so formed would produce a uniform black surface if printed, and the engraving is produced by scraping off or burnishing the parts representing the middle and high lights as shown by the transferred design or picture. The print produced from such a plate is velvety and graded. (3) Aquatint e., a method in which the surface of a plate, after the design has been outlined upon it, is coated with a powdered rosin preparation and etched. This produces a graining in the finished print which gives the effect of an India-ink drawing. This process has been largely superseded by lithography. (4) Stipple e., a process in which the lights and shades are produced by the incision of dots in the metal plate instead of lines. It is little used at present. In wax e. the design is drawn, impressed, or photographed upon a plate coated with wax, which is cut through to the metal base. This is known also, in England, as wax etching. In chalk e. there are two commercial methods now in use: (1) The graphotype, a rapid process, as for producing pictures for newspapers, in which a plate is covered with a layer of chalk or of zinc oxid by hydraulic pressure, and a drawing made on the surface with a silicious ink. When this ink hardens, the intermediate soft portions are brushed away, leaving a block which may be stereotyped for printing. (2) A process in which the design is scratched on a chalk-coated plate and a mold made from the intaglio so produced. Glass-e. consists of a method of decorating glass in which hydrofluoric acid is sometimes used. The process is one of etching. See ETCHING; GLASS.

For the different methods of PHOTO-ENGRAVING, see under that term, and for gelatin and similar processes, see ALBERTYPE; ARTOTYPE; COLLOTYPE; HELIOTYPE PHOTOGRAVURE; STANNOTYPE; WOODBURYTYPE.

> During the earlier part of the eighteenth century engraving on wood can scarcely be said to have flourished in England.
> AUSTIN DOBSON Thomas Bewick p. 1. [o. & co. 1884.]

2. An engraved inscription, device, etc. 3. An engraved plate or block. 4. A picture or design printed from an engraved plate; also, specifically, in copyright law, prints or illustrations which are classified with the fine arts. In art, an "engraving" usually means a print produced from a copper or steel plate engraved with the burin or dry-point, as distinguished from an etching or photo-engraving.

The picture print d from a plate engraved by means of any of the processes described in the phrases below is called by the name of the process; as, a photo-engraving.

Syn.: see PICTURE.— acoustic engraving, engraving by impression of the human voice, as that effected on the cylinder of a phonograph.— black-line e., a wood-engraving in which the design is produced by heavy black lines. — cop'per-plate-en-grav"ing, steel-e., n. The art of engraving reversed designs in incised lines on a copper or steel plate, as distinguished from wood-engraving, and other processes which produce reversed designs in relief.— draw-point e., dry-point e., the production of incised lines on a copper or steel plate, mechanically, with a sharp steel point, as distinguished from etching, in which the lines are bitten in by acid.— eccentric e., the production of geometrical designs by a machine like a rose-engine: used in bank-note engraving.— electric e., a method of etching metallic plates in which an electrolytic cell is used, and the required parts are eaten out by electrolysis instead of by acids in the regular manner.— heliographic e., photo-engraving or photo-etching, as on a plate coated with bitumen.— photochemical e., a process of producing an engraved block or plate for printing, as by photographing the original on metal and etching away the metal in those portions unaffected by the light; photo-etching.— photographic e. 1. Engraving on wood from a design photographed on the block. 2. The making of an engraved plate or block by photomechanical or photochemical process; photo-engraving. (For other processes of engraving, see ANAGLYPTOGRAPHIC; ANASTATIC; CAMEO; GELATIN; RELIEF.)

II. i. To receive and care for guests; as, he entertains delightfully.

C. D. WARNER Little Journey in the World ch. 10. [s. 1889.]

To entertain, in the sense here considered, is to engage and pleasantly occupy the attention; to amuse is to occupy the attention in a specially bright and cheerful way, often with that which excites merriment or laughter; as, he entertained us with an amusing story. To divert is to turn from serious thoughts or laborious pursuits to something that lightly and accessorily occupies the mind; one may be entertained or amused who has nothing serious or laborious from which to be diverted. To recreate, literally to re-create, is to restore mind or body to healthful activity that restores strength and energy for serious work. To beguile is, as it were, to cheat into cheer and comfort by something that insensibly draws thought or feeling away from pain or disquiet.

en-thu'si-asm, 1 en'thū'zi-a-zm; 2 ėn-thū'si-ązm, n. 1. Intense and rapturous feeling felt or displayed, either habitually or in a particular case, by individuals or by multitudes, especially as exhibited in ardent zeal for a person, principle, or cause; zealous admiration; earnestness; fervor; as, enthusiasm for art.

The precept had its use . . . but it could never inspire them [men] with an enthusiasm of humanity.

J. S. Stuart-Glennie Euripides Homo p. 175. [R. bros. 1866.]

Sydney Dobell Balder Dream p. 330. [bain. & s.]

2. [Colloq.] The object of enthusiastic pursuit or regard; as, music is his great enthusiasm. 3. [Archaic.] Exalted or ecstatic feeling arising from supposed inspiration; divine fury or frenzy; possession; as, the enthusiasm of the sibyls. [< F. enthousiasme, < Gr. enthousiasmos, < en, in, + theos, god.] en-thy'si-asm†.

SYN.: ardor, devotedness, ecstasy, excitement, extravagance, fervency, fervor, frenzy, inspiration, intensity, passion, rapture, transport, vehemence, zeal. The old meaning of enthusiasm implies a pretended inspiration, an almost frantic extravagance in behalf of something supposed to be an expression of the divine will. This sense remains as the controlling one in the kindred noun enthusiast. Enthusiasm has now chiefly the meaning of an earnest and commendable devotion or an eager interest. Against the hindrances of the world, nothing great and good can be carried without a certain fervor, intensity, and vehemence; these joined with faith, courage, and hopefulness make enthusiasm. Zeal is burning earnestness, always tending to vigorous action with the added element of enthusiasm, but often without its hopefulness.—ANT.: calculation, calmness, caution, coldness, deadness, dulness, indifference, policy, prudence, timidity, wariness.

en-thu'si-ast, 1 en-thū'zi-ast; 2 ėn-thū'si-ąst, n. 1. One who is prone to enthusiasm; one who is passionately devoted to a person, principle, or object; an ardent adherent or advocate. [Archaic.] One who is exhilarated by imagining himself to be under divine influence.

The first class [of rationalists] consider revelation a superstition and Jesus either an enthusiast or a deceiver.

J. F. Clarke Ten Great Religions p. 25. [c. & p. 1865.]

3. Eccl. See EUCHITE. [< F. enthousiaste, < Gr. enthousiastės, < en, in, + theos, god.] en-thu'si-ast.

en-thu"si-as'tic, 1 en-thū"zi-as'tik; 2 ėn-thū"si-ąs'tic, a. 1. Given to enthusiasm; full of zeal and fervor; as, an enthusiastic lover of music. 2. Characterized by enthusiasm; as, enthusiastic cooperation or applause. 3. [Archaic.] Moved by or acting under the belief of divine inspiration or influence.

The ancients may have been right in regarding Zeschylus as an enthusiastic writer, obeying the impulse of the god within.

en'tro-py, 1 en'tro-pɪ; 2 ĕn'tro-py, n. Physics. In thermodynamics, a property of a body, expressed as a mathematical quantity which remains constant when a gas or other body changes its volume or does work without any heat entering or leaving it, but which, if a small amount of heat enters or leaves the body, is increased or diminished proportionally to this amount divided by the absolute temperature. Its abbreviation is the Greek letter ϕ.

Since heat always flows from a higher to a lower temperature, a body that gains heat always gains more entropy than is lost by the body losing that heat; hence, with every flow of heat the total entropy of a system of bodies rises, and thus tends toward a maximum. Owing to a misapprehension of the meaning of Clausius, the inventor of the term, entropy has been used also to mean available energy, by Tait, Maxwell, and others, but these writers subsequently returned to the original definition, which is now accepted as standard.

Clausius has called this constant transformation of motion into heat, entropy, and has formulated this law in these terms, 'The entropy of the Universe tends towards a maximum state.'
JANET Final Causes tr. by Affleck, bk. i, ch. 6, p. 190. [S. 1883.]

— entropy leakage (Physics), dissipation of heat-energy in a medium, in consequence of its expansion.— increase of e., see quotation under ENTROPY.

En'za, 1 en'za; 2 ĕn'zȧ, n. (1224–1272.) A king of Sardinia who defeated a Genoese fleet and a Mongol army.

en'zo-ic, 1 en'zō-ik; 2 ĕn'zō-ĭk, a. [Rare.] Endemic among animals in a particular region: said of a zymotic disease. II. n. A disease to which the domestic animals of a given locality are peculiarly liable.

c, ENZ- + -IC.] 1. Pertaining to enzymes. 2. Zymotic.

en'zym, } 1 en'zaim; 2 ĕn'zym, n. Chem. 1. An unor-en'zyme, } ganized or chemical compound of vegetable or animal origin that causes chemical transformation, as hydrolysis, oxidation, coagulation, synthesis, reduction, etc.

An enzym is produced by living cells, either animal or vegetable. When brought into relation with certain organic compounds, it acts usually, but not always, tends to decompose them into simpler combinations without itself undergoing any change. Its precise mode of action is not definitely understood, but it is apparently catalytic. An enzym acts only in solution, and an infinitesimal quantity serves to break up or change a large mass of the substance or substances on which it acts. Enzyms may be classified as follows: (1) Hydrolytic, those that split up carbohydrates: (a) diastatic; (b) inverting; (c) enzyms that decompose glucosides; (2) enzyms that (a) effect solution of albumin; (b) decompose fats; (c) split monosaccharids; (d) convert urea into ammonium carbonate: (e) oxydize and reduce matter.

Enzyms are soluble in water and are precipitated by alcohol, but not in a pure form. They act most readily in a temperature between 30° C. and 50° C., but become inactive in the presence of water when heated to 100° C. Typical enzyms are zymase, secreted by the yeast-plant, which decomposes the sugar in alcoholic fermentation, and these elaborated by the organs of digestion, as ptyalin, a diastatic enzym of the saliva, which converts starch into sugar; pepsin, an enzym of the stomach, which dissolves albumin; trypsin, an enzym of the pancreas, which converts proteids into albumoses and peptones; etc. See FERMENTATION.

2. Leavened bread; specif., bread used in the eucharist, as by the Greek Church: opposed to azym. [< Gr. enzymos, fermented, < en, in, + zymē, leaven.] —en'zym'ic, en'zy-mot'ic, a.— en'zy-mo'sis, n. The action of an enzym.

en'zy-ma'tion, n. Same as enzymosis.

en'zy-mo'sis, n. Same as enzymolysis.

en'zy-mol, n. [en'zi-mōl or -mol; 2 ĕn'zy-mŏl or -mōl, n. A proteidferment employed as a substitute for hydrogen peroxid in treating the ulcerated surface of the pharynx.

en'zy-mol'o-gy, n. [en'zi-mol'o-ji; 2 ĕn'zy-mŏl'o-gy, n. Chem. The science or study of enzyms.

e'o-, a. [ē'o-; 2 ē'o-, prefix. Geol. Indicating the dawn or beginning of an epoch, as Eocene. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn.]

E O. A game played for stakes, the winning or losing of these depending upon whether a ball rolls into a space marked E or into one marked O.

e. o., abbr. Ex officio.

e-o'lan, n. [ē-ō'lan; 2 ē-ō'lan, a. [poet.] Of or pertaining to the dawn; auroral. [< L. eous, < Gr. ēōs, < ēōs, dawn.]

E'o-car'bo-nif'er-ous, a. Geol. Same as Mississippian.

E'o-car'di-an, [ē'o-kär'di-ən; 2 ē'o-kär'di-ăn, n. pl. Paleon. A family of fossil rodents found in the Miocene formation of Patagonia. [< Eo- + Gr. kardia, heart.]

E'o-cene, [ē'o-sēn; 2 ē'o-sēn. I. a. Of or pertaining to the earliest epoch of the Cenozoic era and Paleogene period, or to the series of strata deposited during that epoch. E'o-cen'ic. II. n. The Eocene epoch, following the Cretaceous period, and succeeded by the Oligocene epoch; also, the Eocene series of strata. See GEOLOGY. [< Eo- + cene, dawn, + kainos, new.]

In America, during the Eocene, palms, and figs, and evergreens in Dakota, show a temperature there about that of Florida now.
Jos. Le Conte, Elements of Geology, p. 345. D., 1889.

E'o-ci-ca'da, [ē'o-si-kā'də; 2 ē'o-ci-cā'da, n. Paleon. A genus of the family Cicadidæ, found in the Jurassic limestone of Bavaria. [< Eo- + CICADA.]

Skull of Eohippus, after restoration in American Museum of Natural History, New York.

e'o-de-mot'ic, [ī'o-di-mot'ik; 2 ē'o-de-mŏt'ic, a. Belonging to the beginnings of society. [< Eo- + DEMOTIC.]

E'o-gæ'a, [ē'o-jē'ə; 2 ē'o-gē'a, n. Zoögeog. A division embracing the Asian, South American, Australian, and New Zealand realms: opposed to Cenogæa. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn, + gaia, earth.]— E'o-gæ'an, a.

Eo'ghan, [ō'ən; 2ō'an, n. [Ir.] A Gaelic masculine personal name variously translated as Owen and Eugene.— Eoghan Rnadh, name of O'Neill, Owen Roe.

e'o-hip'pus, [ī'o-hip'us; 2 ē'o-hip'ŭs, n. Mam. An Eocene perissodactyl with 4 anterior and 3 posterior digits, supposedly allied to the primitive ancestors of the horse-like animals. [< Eo- + Gr. hippos, horse.]

e'ō-his'tor-ic, [ī'o-his-tor'ik; 2 ē'o-his-tŏr'ic, a. Belonging to the beginning of human history.

e'o-in'dian, [ī'o-in'diən; 2 ē'o-in'dian, n. Geol. The process by which wind modifies land-surfaces, both directly by transportation of dust and sand and by the work of sand-blasts, and indirectly by wave-action on shores; colic gradation. [< L. Æolus, wind-god.]

E-o-li'an, [ē-ō'li-ən; 2 ē-ō'li-ăn, a. Pertaining to Æ-o-li'an, [Æolus, the god of the winds. 2. [e-] Hence, pertaining to the winds; produced or borne by the action of the air; aerial; as, eolian music; eolian deposits of fine sand. 3. Pertaining to Æolus, the mythical founder of Æolis; hence, of or belonging to the Eolic race or region in Greece, or in Eolis, Asia Minor, colonized by that race. See ÆOLUS.— eolian attachment. 1. An arrangement for forcing the air through the strings of a musical instrument, as of a pianoforte, to prolong the sound and increase its volume. 2. A wind-actuated attachment to a piano for the same keys, its bellows being worked by a pedal.— eolian harp, eolian lyre, a stringed instrument so constructed as to produce musical sounds when exposed to a current of air. See illus. below.

Of some old mansion, wets with many moans.
Longfellow Wayside Inn, Palcem of Ser Federico st. 4.

— Eolian limestone, a Lower Silurian or Cambrian limestone, named from Mt. Eolis, Vermont, where it occurs. Called Stockbridge limestone in Massachusetts.— Eolian mode, see GREEK MODES, GREGORIAN MODES, under MODE. — eolian rocks (Geol.), rocks and soils formed on dry land, specif., rocks consolidated from wind-heaped dunes.

E-o'li-an,] n. 1. A member of the Eolic division of the Æ-o'li-an,] Greek race. 2. [e-] An eolian attachment.

E-o'lic,] [ē-ol'ik; 2 ē-ŏl'ic.
Æ-o'lic,] a. Pertaining to the Eolians, Eolis, or Æolus; as, the Eolic dialect. II. n. The Eolic dialect of the Greek language, the language of the Eolians, used by the Lesbian poets Sappho and Alcæus.— Eolic digamma, the sixth letter of the early Greek alphabet.

Eolian Harp, invented by Kucker. (Hawkins "History of Music.")

e'o-lif'ra, [ī'o-lif'rə; 2 ē'o-lĭf'ra, n. Mus. A reed-instrument, precursor of the accordion, having some features of the concertina. [< L. Æolus, Æolus, < Gr. Aiolos, < aiolos, quick-moving.]

e-o'li-pile, [ī-ol'i-pil or ē-o'li-pil; 2 ē-ŏl'i-pil or ē-o'li-pil, n. 1. A reaction motor consisting of a hollow sphere upon trunnions, usually above a boiler connected with it. An right angles to its trunnions the sphere has radial pipes with ends at right angles to them and to the trunnions. Escape of steam from these rotates the sphere oppositely to the current. This device, first described by Hero of Alexandria about 150 B. C., was exhibited in the Serapeion at Athens, and is reputed to be the earliest steam-engine. See illus. in next column.

2. One of various motors working on the same principle, as for operating toys, etc. [< L. æolopilus, < Æolus, god of the winds, + pila, ball.] e-o'li-pyle; e-o'lo-pile;

E'o-list,] [ē'o-list; 2 ē'o-lĭst. n. Æ'o-list,] [Humorous.] A pretender to inspiration.

Swift Works, Tale of a Tub p. 79. (w. p. w. 1871.)

E'o-lis'tic,] [ē'o-lis'tik; 2 ē'o-lĭs'- Æ'o-lis'tic,] tic, a. Given to windy oratory.

e'o-lith'ic, [ī'o-lith'ik; 2 ē'o-lĭth'ic, a. Geol. & Archeol. Pertaining to the earliest stone age, or such part as existed in the Tertiary, characterized by rude flint and stone implements. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn, + lithos, stone.]— e'o-lith, n. A prehistoric stone weapon or implement; etc.

Hero's Eolipile.

e'o-lo'di-on,] [ī'o-lō'di-ən, -lod'i-kon; 2 ē'o-lō'di-ŏn, e'o-lod'i-con,] -lŏd'i-cŏn, n. A musical instrument the tones of which are produced by steel springs struck by hammers operated by an ordinary keyboard. [< L. Æolus (see EOLINA) + odion as in MELODION.]

e'o-lo-me-lod'i-con, [ī'o-lo-mi-lod'i-kon; 2 ē'o-lo-me-lŏd'i-cŏn, n. An collation having metal tubes to strengthen its springs. [Made up of EOLODION + MELODION.]

e-ol'o-phon,] [ī-ol'o-fon; 2 ē-ŏl'o-fŏn, n. Mus. A scraphine. æ-ol'o-phon,] [< L., Æolus (see EOLINA) + Gr. phōnē, voice.]

e'o-lo-ro'ro, [ī'o-lo-ro'ro; 2 ē'o-lo-rō'rō, etc. LOLLYPOPPY, etc.

e'on,] [ē'on; 2 ē'ŏn, n. 1. An age of the universe; an æ'on,] incalculable period constituting one of the longest conceivable divisions of time; a cosmic or geologic cycle; a theological interval; an eternity, or eternity.

The present age, or æon, is "time"; the future age, or æon, is "eternity." W. G. T. Shedd Theology vol. ii. p. 683. [s. 1889.]

2. Neoplat. & Gnostic Philos. The personification of a divine volition or emanation, especially, one of the intitiles class of emanations from the Deity whose substantial powers, embraced in the divine essence, constituted the divine plenitude or pleroma. See GNOSTICISM, 3†. The spiritual world. [< L. æon, < Gr. aiōn, age.] Syn. see AGE.

e-o'ni-an, a. Pertaining to or lasting for eons; everlasting; eternal.— e-on'ic, a. Same as eonian. [Rare.]

One who maintains that the world is eternal.— e-on'ism, n. [Rare.]

E'on' de Beaulat'a, [ē'ōn' də bō'mäṅ'; 2 ē'ŏn' de bō'mäṅ', Charles G. L. A. A. T. d', "Chevalier d'Eon" (1728–1810). A French diplomat; historic writer, essayist, and duelist, who acted as a female in female dress, pensioned by the French government on condition that he should wear women's dress, and concealed his sex so well from this time that it was uncertain to many until his death.

E'o-pa'læ-o-zo'ic, [ī'o-pā'lī-o-zō'ik; 2 ē'o-pā'lē-o-zō'ic, n. Geol. The earlier portion of Paleozoic time, including the Cambrian and the Silurian. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn, + PALÆOZOIC.]

e'o-phone, [ī'o-fōn; 2 ē'o-fōn, n. An apparatus for determining direction of a sound; used to locate danger at sea on dark nights or in foggy weather.

e'o-phyte, [ī'o-fīt; 2 ē'o-fīt, n. A fossil plant of the earliest fossiliferous rocks. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn, + phyton, plant.]— e'o-phyt'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the earliest forms of plant life.

E'o-pla-ceph'o-ra, [ī'o-pla-kef'o-ra; 2 ē'o-pla-cĕf'o-ra, n. pl. Paleon. A suborder of polyconchiferous Mollusca-Protobranchiata, having the articulamentum and tegumentum coextensive, or the former projecting beyond the latter, and insertion-plates, and posterior gills. It has two families, one Carboniferous, the other Permian or Triassic. [< EO- + Gr. plax, plate, + pherō, bear.]

e'o-phyt'o-lite, [ī'o-ral'o-lait; 2 ē'o-fīt'o-lit, n. Petrog. A rhyolite of an early geological period.

eorl, [eorl; 2 ĕorl, n. Ang.-Hist. An earl among the Anglo-Saxons.

As at the bottom of the Anglo-Saxon social system the slave is found, so at the top we find the eorl. J. R. Lowell Anglo-Saxon Freedom ch. 1, p. 5. ls.

E'os, [ī'os; 2 ē'ŏs, n. Gr. Myth. Specific view of partition The goddess of the dawn: fre- or reflector and receiver quently referred to in the Ho- ax, partition or vane; bb, meric poems as rhododaktulos, or "the rosy-fingered": daughter of Hyperion, wife of Tithonus, and mother of Memnon and of the Winds; the analogy of the Roman Aurora, < aurum, < Gr. eōs, dawn.

E'o-saur'us, [ī'o-sôr'us; 2 ē'o-sa'rŭs, n. Paleon. A genus of extinct stegocephalous amphibians, parts of whose vertebræ have been found in the coal-measures of Nova Scotia.

E'o-scor'pi-us, [ī'o-skôr'pi-us; 2 ē'o-scŏr'pi-ŭs, n. Paleon. A genus of fossil scorpions found in the Carboniferous rocks of Illinois.

e'o-sin, [ī'o-sin; 2 ē'o-sĭn, n. Chem. 1. A reddish coloring-matter ($C_{20}H_8Br_4O_5$) derived from coal-tar: used for dyeing cotton, silk, or wool, for making red ink and pink lakes, and as a stain in microscopical work, etc. Its fluorescence is seen in solution. 2. Any of several analogous dyes derived from coal-tar. See syn. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn.] e'o-sine'; cosinic acid;— methyl eosin, same as METHYRIN, 1.— e'o-sin-ate, n. A salt of eosinic acid.— e'o-sin'ic, a.— e'o-sin'o-phil, a. Having an affinity for eosin; oxyphil; applied in microscopy to bodies easily stained by eosin or similar anilin dyes; specif., to stainable leucocytes which constitute about 4 per cent. of the corpuscles in normal blood.— e'o-sin'o-phil, n. An eosinophil leucocyte.— e'o-sin'o-phil'ic, a.— e'o-si-noph'i-lous, a.— e'o-sin'o-phil'i-a, a condition of the blood occurring in certain diseases characterized by the presence of an excess of eosinophils.

e'o-sŭ-um,] [ē'o-sŭ-um; 2 ē'o-sŭ-ŭm, n. Chem. Krypton, a recently discovered elemental gas: name suggested by Berthelot. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn.]

e'o-so-late,] [ē'o-so-lāt; 2 ē'o-so-lāt, n. Chem. Any salt of e'o-so-lite,] sulfo-acids of aliphatic eremote esters. Argentic eosolate is employed in gonorrhea, calcium eosolate in diabetes and quinin eosolate is recommended in malaria. [< EOSIN + -OL.]

e-os'pho-rite,] [ē-os'fo-rit; 2 ē-ŏs'fo-rit, n. Mineral. A vitreous to subresinous, rosecpink or yellowish to colorless aluminum phosphate containing iron and manganese, $AEPO_4.(FeMN)(OH)_2$, crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. [< G. eosphoros, bringing the dawn, < eos, dawn, + phorō, bear.]

E'os-tre,] [ē'os-ter; 2 ē'ŏs-ter, n. An Anglo-Saxon goddess, E'os-ter,] said by Bede to have been worshiped during a festival in spring, and from whom Easter takes its name.

E'ö-tvös,] [ē'ö-vösh; 2 ē'ŏt-vösh, Joseph, Baron (*b.*1813–; d.1871). A Hungarian writer and statesman.

E'o-zo'ic, [ī'o-zō'ik; 2 ē'o-zō'ic, a. Geol. Of or pertaining to the upper portion of the Archæan series of rocks, immediately underlying the Paleozoic: embracing the Laurentian and Huronian periods. [< Gr. ēōs, dawn, + zōē, life.]

E'o-zo'ic, n. The Upper Archæan rocks.

Dawson, after his announcement of the animal nature of the Eozoon, suggested the name Eozoic.
DANA Geology p. 148. [s. n. a. co. 1880.]

E'o-zo'on, [ī'o-zō'on; 2 ē'o-zō'ŏn, n. An irregular cellular mass containing calcareous matter, contained in the Laurentian rocks of Canada, Bohemia, Scandinavia, etc., and formerly regarded by some naturalists as a foraminifer related to the Nummulitidæ.

The peculiar structure occurring in the Lower Laurentian limestone, as well as other limestones of Archæan age described as Nummulitaceous genus, 'Eozoon,' by Carpenter and Dawson . . . is now universally regarded as of mineral origin.
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. x, p. 634.

ep-ac'me, [ep-ak'mi; 2 ĕp-ăc'me, n. Biol. The period in the phylogeny of a group of organisms preceding the greatest development in numbers and forms: contrasted with acmæ and paracmæ. [< EPI- + ACME.]

ep'a-cri-da'ce-æ, [ep'ə-kri-dā'si-ē; 2 ep'a-cri-dā'ce-æ, n. pl. Bot. A family of shrubs, vines, or trees, the typical family, of the order Ericales — with alternate coriaceous evergreen leaves and spiked or racemose clusters of regular pentamerous white or rose-colored flowers. It includes 21 genera, mostly natives of Australia. [< EPACRIS.]— ep'a-cri'id, n. Any plant of this order.— ep'a-cri-da'ceous, a.

ep'a-cris, [ep'ə-kris; 2 ĕp'a-cris, n. Bot. A genus of shrubs of the epacrid family, mainly Australian, with lanceolate leaves and clusters of white or rose-colored flowers. Several species are cultivated. [< Gr. akris, summit, top.]

ep'act, [ep'akt; 2 ĕp'ăct, n. 1. The excess of the solar year over 12 lunar months, generally about 11 days. astronomical or annual epact, 2. The number of days in the age of the moon on the first day of any particular year. [< F. epacte, < L.L. epacta, < Gr. epaktē, < epi, to, + agō, lead.]— menstrual or monthly epact, the excess of the calendar month over the mean lunar month (29.5 days).

ep-ac'tal, [ep-ak'tal; 2 ĕp-ăc'tal, a. Anat. Inserted among others; intercalary; additional. [< Gr. epaktos, intercalated, < epagō, < epi, to, + agō, lead.]— epactal bone, one of the small bones inserted in the sutures of the skull; a Wormian bone; especially, the interparietal bone.

E-pa'ne-tus,] [ē-pa'ni-tus; 2 ē-pā'nē-tŭs, n. Bib. Hom. xvi, 5.

ep'a-gom'e-næ, [ep'ə-gom'i-nē; 2 ep'a-gŏm'e-nē, n. pl. Same as EPAGOMENAL DAYS.

ep'a-gom'e-nal, [ep'ə-gom'i-nəl; 2 ep'a-gŏm'e-nal, a. Remaining over; intercalary. [< Gr. epagomenos, pr. pass. of epagō; see EPACTAL.] ep'a-gom'e-nic, epagomenal days, in some ancient calendars, as the Alexandrian, the excess of days in the solar year over 12 months of 30 days each.

e'pai-e-a'ceous, [ī'pai-e-ā'shəs; 2 ē'pai-e-ā'shŭs, a. Bot. Having no chaffy scales. [< Gr. a- priv., palea, chaff.]

e-pal'pate, [ī-pal'pāt; 2 ē-păl'pāt, a. Entom. Without palpi.

e-pal'pe-brate, [ī-pal'pi-brēt; 2 ē-păl'pe-brāt, a. Having no eyelids. [< Gr. a- priv., palpebra, eyelid.]

E-pam'i-non'das, [ī-pam'i-non'dəs; 2 ē-păm'i-nŏn'das, n. A Theban statesman of the 3d century B. C., who twice defeated the Spartans. E-pa-mei-non'dasz [Gr.].

ep-an'a-di-plo'sis, [ep'ə-nə-di-plō'sis; 2 ep'a-năn'a-di-plō'sis, n. Rhet. The construction of a sentence so that the same word occurs both at the beginning and at the end, as in "severe to his servants, to his children severe." See REPETITION. [L., < Gr. epanadiplosis, repetition, < epi, on; and see ANADIPLOSIS.]

ep-an'a-lep'sis, [ep'ə-nə-lep'sis; 2 ĕp-ăn'a-lĕp'sis, n. Rhet. The resumption or repetition of a word or clause after other words have intervened, to complete or enforce one's meaning, as in "it was both a triumph and a failure — a triumph," etc. See REPETITION. [< Gr. epanalēpsis, < epi, upon, + ana, back, + lambanō, take.]

ep'a-naph'o-ra, [ep'ə-naf'o-rə; 2 ep'a-năph'o-ra, n. Same as ANAPHORA, 1. [L., < Gr. epanaphora, < epi, upon, + ana, back, + pherō, carry.]

ep'an-nas'tro-phe, [ep'ə-nas'tro-fi; 2 ĕp'an-năs'tro-fe, n. Rhet. The repetition at the beginning of a clause or sentence of the closing word or words of the preceding clause or sentence. See REPETITION. [< Gr. epanastrophē, return, < epi, on; and see ANASTROPHE.]

ep'an-ni'sog'na-thism, [ep'ə-nai'sog'nə-thizm; 2 ĕp-ăn'i-sŏg'na-thĭsm, n. Having the teeth of the upper jaw narrower than those of the lower, as canies. [< EPI- + Gr. anisos, unequal (< an-, not, + isos, equal), + gnathos, jaw.]— ep-an'i-sog'nous, a.

Ep-an'o-don'ta, [ep-an'o-don'tə; 2 ĕp-ăn'o-dŏn'ta, n. pl. Herp. A superfamily or suborder of anglostomatous serpents with the maxillary bones vertical and free and alone bearing teeth, as in the Typhlopidæ. [< Gr. epanō (< epi, upon, + anō, above) + odous (odont-), tooth.]— ep-an'o-dont, a.

ep-an'o-dos, [ep-an'o-dos; 2 ĕp-ăn'o-dŏs, n. Rhet. 1. Recapitulation of topics, item by item, often with additional discussion, especially such recapitulation in inverse order. 2. Repetition with inversion. 3. A return to the subject of discourse after digression. [< Gr. epanodos; see EPANODY.]

ep-an'o-dy, [ep-an'o-di; 2 ĕp-ăn'o-dy, n. Bot. The return of an abnormally irregular flower to the normal form: by some biologists considered an instance of reversion.

ep-an'o-mous, [ep-an'o-məs; 2 ep-ăn'o-mŭs, a. [< Gr. epanomos, < epi, upon; and see ANOMIC.]

ep"a-no'rin, 1 ep"e-nō'rin; 2 ĕp"a-nō'rin, n. Chem. A yellow crystalline compound occurring in the lichen Lecanora epanora, melting at about 132°C.

Ep"a-nor'thi-dæ, 1 ep"a-nôr'thi-dē; 2 ĕp"a-nôr'thi-dē, n. pl. Zool. A family of diprotodont marsupials represented in South America by the fossil genus Epanorthus, and other extinct forms, and by a single living genus (Caenolestes) with two species, having the character of small and much generalized teeth. [< EPI- + Gr. orthios, upright.]

ep-an"or-tho'sis, 1 ep-an'or-thō'sis; 2 ĕp-ăn"ôr-thō'sis, n. Rhet. The retraction of a statement in order to substitute something stronger, as John Randolph's "Rats, did I say?— mice! mice!" [LL., < Gr. epanorthōsis, < epi, upon, + ana, again, + orthos, straight.] —ep-an"or-thot'ic, a.
